Nay, more, they grew more and more informative, and were so much appreciated that finally there came through a neutral channel a secret message from the German Intelligence Department informing him that the Kaiser had conferred on him the Iron Cross.

THE CARLTON PALACES.

The purchase of a house in Carlton Gardens (overlooking St. James' Park) by one of our newspaper peers makes one reflect how uncomfortable and how stately must have been the lives of the owners of these palaces. They have vast reception rooms, huge basements, steep staircases-fairly broad at first, but after the first floor tapering into corkscrews towards the servants' rooms-great difficulty in adequate lighting, wholly uncomfortable and unattractive bedrooms. In this respect it always seems strange that people (ladies especially) could pend so much thought and money on eir dining rooms, in which they assed an hour or two daily, leaving their bedrooms, where a third of their lives was spent, wholly undecorated
