Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

AN UNUSUAL LETTER.

"Do you know what I'm going to do," writes a bright little letter friend. "I'm going to write a letter to myself to be opened at about the time I'm 50 and tell myself a lot of things that perhaps I won't see then as I do now."

"I'm going to say, 'Mrs. or Miss Who-ever-you-are-then: Don't you fret about every little thing that comes along, and don't say a single sour thing about anyone, because there are a lot of things about everybody that you don't know and if you are sour you never will know. If you are sweet and sincere and trustworthy, maybe people will talk to you about some of these wonderful things and it does make you love them so.'"

She Hopes Her Plain Talks Will Help.

"There is going to be some pretty plain talk in that letter, and if I need it, maybe it will jar a little; but if I need it, the purpose of my letter will be accomplished anyway."

"What do you think of the idea?" she asked me.

"That it's a corker, of course. Only I wish she had told me a little more about what's going into that letter."

"I'm not so young as she, so perhaps I can't suggest as well, but I can think of several things of which 20 or 25 might well remind 50 or 60."

Young People Will Be Young People.

For instance, that young people love to have a good time and giggle and be noisy over nothing, and that there is no use expecting them to be quiet and sedate like older folks;

That young people do not like older people who are always saying that young people don't behave as well as they used to in their day;

That young people have a passionate desire to run their lives their own way and that any help must be accomplished by tact, not by pigheaded interference;

Perhaps You Can Add Some Suggestions.

That children and young folks are very intense and, because they lack perspective, often suffer as much from what seem to their elders small troubles, as if those troubles really were large.

I wonder what 50 or 60 would say to that letter from its old self? I wonder if, as my optimistic little friend is so sure, the purpose of the letter would be accomplished? For it is one thing to know a thing is true. It is quite another to feel it so strongly that the feeling becomes a spring of action.

Naming the Baby.

They were discussing it—it with a capital "I." The only thing that counted in the world wide world. In other words, the new baby.

"Have you settled its name yet?" asked the visitor.

"Yes," replied the fond mother. "And you should have seen the trouble we had! It's so difficult to get a really good and appropriate name, don't you think?"

"How did you settle it?"

"Well, I got a book on nomenclature and read it all through."

"Whatever's that?" exclaimed the visitor.

"Oh, it's a book giving thousands and thousands of names for children to be christened. It's in two volumes, and I don't believe a single name was ever invented that is not mentioned. We've decided on John."

JIM THE PENMAN.

The greatest forger of his day, of international renown, the other morning took his way, all footsore, to his native town.

There were no greater human sharks in all the records of the past; he skinned unnumbered easy marks, and cleaned up millions, first and last.

And now we see him sadly wend, to seek the town where he was born, without a buck, without a friend, all in, world beaten and forlorn.

"Why, yes," the Village Fathers cried, "there is a haven for you here; the poor-house doors are open wide—rest there, O wreck of yesterday." There Jim the Penman found a stall, nor will he leave those doors again; and there he sits, against the wall, and thinks of all that might have been.

As to the poorhouse or the jail go by all the kings of crime, whose crooked plans for reaping kins use up the efforts of their prime. The man who fairly earns his money by industry, can sing and smile; the hoodooed dollar is the one that's gained by trickery and guile.

About Cloudland.

You watch the clouds and admire their beauty, but what else do you know about them? Little or nothing! Study, then, the following cloud collection.

Clouds are of all heights. The average is one and a half miles. The highest is six. The most highly electrified clouds are the lowest—about 700 yards from the ground. The cloud classes are Simple, Intermediate, and Compound.

Simple clouds are sub-divided into Cirrus, Cumulus, and Stratus clouds.

The first are the most elevated, and are like fibre, or loose hair, or "mares' tails." The name "cirrus," is Latin, and means a lock of hair or curl.

Cirrus clouds portend fine weather. Cumulus clouds are lumps, like great sugar-loaves or volumes of smoke. When this sort are fleecy and more against the wind, rain is coming.

When their outline is hard and non-fleecy, and they move with the wind, fine weather is portended.

Stratus clouds are the lowest, and are creeping mists, generally rising and forming in the evening.

Nimbus clouds are the rain-bringers. They have no defined outline, their edges gradually shaping off from the deep grey of the mass into transparency.

The purpose of clouds is threefold. They are Nature's screens to arrest undue radiation of heat from the earth; they temper the sun's rays and create temperate countries; they are the great storehouses of rain.

That tiny bit of fleece you can see on a summer's day, high up, is just—snowflakes!

Tumults are full and gathered.

FAITH.

When sorrow comes, as come it must, In God a man must place his trust. There is no power in mortal speech The anguish of his soul to reach.

No voice, however sweet and low, Can comfort him or ease the blow.

He cannot from his fellowmen Take strength that will sustain him then.

With all that kindly hands will do, And all that love may offer, too, He must believe throughout the test That God has willed it for the best.

We who would be his friends are dumb, Words from our lips but freely come; We feel, as we extend our hands, That one Power only understands And truly knows the reason why So beautiful a soul must die.

We realize how helpless then Are all the gifts of mortal men. No word which we have power to say Can take the sting of grief away— That Power which marks the sparrow's fall.

Must comfort and sustain us all.

When sorrow comes, as come it must, In God a man must place his trust. With all the wealth which he may own, He then must meet the test alone, And only he may stand serene Who has a faith on which to lean.

TO RACE ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

New York, Aug. 24.—With the departure from New York next Saturday of the two passenger liners, Olympic and Aquitania, both among the largest ships now afloat, shipping here are anticipating an interesting contest for a possible record trans-Atlantic voyage.

Both ships were recently converted to oil-burners and on all voyages since they were so equipped, their officers have been reaching out for a new speed record. Olympic registers 46,359 gross tons and Aquitania 45,647 tons, which makes them almost evenly matched.
