TO-DAY

He carved his name in the granite hills of the North. Made himself master of all the country round. And left out love. And when wife, daughter, friends and power were gone—Another inspiring Gilbert Parker romance, as full of the big fine things in human hearts as Melford's "Behold My Wife."

TRINITY

He was who in English Harbor, Trinity Bay, a hundred and fifty years ago, when Pottle, Lockyer, and others came from Christ Church, Hants, England.

One of the best blood that courses through the veins of many of our people (down through three generations) by people who came to Newfoundland from Christ Church, Hants, England, several hundred years ago. Several of these people came to Trinity and settled here; whilst others settled in the northern base of the Horse Head, and because of their love for land of their birth, they called it English Harbor.

One of the earliest of those who settled there were William Sweet, John Hart, Benjamin Higden, John Thomas, Thomas Wells, and William Bestone, Sr., died in 1761. William Sweet married his widow in 1765. William Sweet died in 1767. His widow died in 1768. Thomas married a daughter of William Sweet.

John Thomas, William Pottle, John Hart, and Joseph Hart, each married a daughter of William Sweet. Amongst those who followed Pottles, Bestones and others from England was one Richard Lockyer. Lockyer as they were known in Christ Church, and as they are still known there, and to many in Trinity. The name was always "Sweet" (Sweet Lockyer), and usually pronounced "Lockyer". The Lockyers and Pottles were neighbours in Christ Church, and as young Richard Lockyer came out to English Harbor some five years after James Pottle, it is surprising to find in the old Parish Register, the following:

Married, Richard Lockyer, Mary Pottle of English Harbor. John Richmond married Susanna, daughter of James and Mary Pottle, and sisters of Mary Pottle, who was married to Richard Lockyer. William Jones, and William Pottle were married where 1753 (the earliest date of Trinity records) hence their marriages are not entered in those records.

During the next fifteen years, six more were born: Richard and Mary Lockyer, viz: John, William, Richard, Elizabeth, James; all of whom are duly recorded in the Parish Register. It is evident that Richard Lockyer soon became a resident and a leading man in English Harbor, for when his wife died in 1776, he referred to as a planter in the Trinity entry: "January 18th, 1776, Mary Lockyer, wife of Richard Lockyer, Planter in English Harbor, in the 77th year of her age, or three of their children died."

In English Harbor, after their mother died, and the following entries appear in the Burial Register: "1775. Interred, Sarah Lockyer, daughter of Richard and Mary Lockyer, English Harbor, aged eleven years." "1776. Interred, Elizabeth, daughter of Richard and Mary Lockyer, English Harbor. They were all buried, of course, in the old Churchyard, Trinity. Apart from those entries that I have found in the Marriage, Baptism and Burial Registers, there is none other in those old books, to indicate what became of Richard Lockyer, or four of his children. And strange to say, that although he must have been a well known man in English Harbor, for at least twenty-five years: that he married there, and into a family (Pottle) whose descendants have lived there ever since: that his wife and two children died there: in spite of all this, I say, I have been told that no one in English Harbor today knows anything about either him or the family, other than what they have heard of, as quoted from the old Church books.

The name Lockyer is a common one in Christ Church, Hants, to-day. I have no doubt that my grandfather, James Lockyer, who came out to Greenspond as an office boy one hundred and thirty years ago, and later, settled in Trinity) and the Lockyer whose descendants live in Bay de Verde to-day; and the Lockyer who began the honoured name in Isle Valen, Placentia Bay,—I have no doubt that they were related to each other; and probably they were also related to Richard Lockyer, the English Harbor Planter, who came out as the representative of a generation before them.

I wrote to the rector of the parish of Christ Church, Hants, many years ago, and asked him if there was anything in particular to the credit of the Lockyers in the parish. I don't think he went to much trouble about making inquiries; but he replied, that in the old

Church Register there is the following note:

"One William Lockyer, whilst visiting an old couple, who lived some distance from the parish church, noticed that when the woman needed a kettle holder, she tore a leaf out of an old book that she kept in the cupboard. He asked to be permitted to examine the book, and then found that it was one of the old registers belonging to the parish that had been missing for nearly a hundred years. He bought it for a half-a-crown, and restored what was left of it, to the parish church authorities. For this he received the thanks of the rector and wardens, and a reminder of his action to future generations, by the insertion of this note in the Register."

Now will you say there is nothing in a name, when a William Lockyer was interested in old Church Registers two hundred years ago. I believe, that, like the old man's wooden leg—it runs in the blood.

THE LITTLE WHITE HOUSE ON THE HILLSIDE, TRINITY.

A little white painted, cottage-roofed house, about twelve feet square, on the ridge of Rider's Hill, Trinity, in the rear of Ryan Brothers' premises, never fails to attract the attention of strangers; standing as it does far removed from, and above all other buildings in the place. It is the Powder-House, that is probably as old as any other part of the premises below, and to which it belongs; as powder was used in large quantities from the very beginning of business activities in the days of the Lesters. I remember when I was a boy in Trinity, in the days of Brooks & Co., that large shipments of powder from Pottle would be landed and sent at once to the powder-house. A good deal of this was used by the sealing fleet, and, of course, by the bird and seal hunters in Trinity. At that time there was a clearly defined serpentine foot track leading from the base of the hill, to the powder-house on the top. I can visualize the twenty or twenty-five men, each with a keg of powder on his shoulder, leaning his right arm free to balance himself, with, and moving like "Brown's Cows" in single file slowly and carefully up the side of the hill to the powder-house.

Nor were the men less careful about their method of coming down, as they were under orders to follow the track slowly, so that it should not be destroyed by a displacement of the gravel soil of the hillside, such as would quickly follow if they attempted to hurry down, or to make short cuts. Any orders of this kind, to move slowly, were as carefully carried out in those days, as they would be to-day. In this respect men have not changed much. The serpentine track has well nigh disappeared, owing to the fact that it has not been very much used during the years of the recent past. The powder-house itself is largely so only in name to-day, as it seldom if ever contains more than twenty kegs at a time; and it stands there in its prominent and solitary position, more as a monument to remind us of the glories that have passed away for ever, than of any great present usefulness. Had it the powers of vision, memory and speech, what an interesting series of stories it could tell, of the various activities that it has witnessed inside of the Narrows; of the living, moving picture shows that were given daily on the premises below; and the men—suffering in type, appearance, and dialect—who conducted the business in its various departments, and to whom we owe more than we shall ever know in this world.

A Daring Thief.

BOGUS "METER MAN."

A daring hall thief whose nonchalant manner has on several occasions saved him from detection is reported to be operating in the city. His method of escaping detection, should he be surprised at a meter man, is to represent himself as a work man. Last week this game was worked on a resident of Franklin Avenue and the lady of the house was only made aware of the trick by questioning the regular meter man, who came on his rounds several days afterwards.
