Belle of Yorkville
Attains Life Ambition With Highest Grades—And She's Giving up Higher Pay as Designer to Make Dream Come True.

Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill—that sounds like the refrain of an old Irish song. It might well be, too, for Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill is going to be a cop—aye, Captain, and a good one, too.

Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill—that name is wonderfully engaging—in thirty years old and her home is in the old Yorkville section, No. 450 East 84th Street. She led all the girls in the recent examination for policewomen with a percentage of 92.35. Physically she scored 100, mentally 87.70, orally 100, in citizenship 75, which is the top figure allowed; in experience 90, and in knowledge of police duties 73 per cent. Of 110 examined only fifty-two qualified. And of the fifty-two, thirty-seven bear Irish names, which is as it should be, according to police tradition.

Twenty years ago, when Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill played "cops and robbers" with the other children of Yorkville, she insisted on being a "cop." She has always wanted to be a cop, and now her dream is about to come true. She also took the examination recently for court attendant and passed. But she is prepared to decline that honor, which pays $2,500 a year at the start, to be a police-woman, and she will have to wait five years to reach that salary rating. Also, she is going to give up a job as designer in a Fifth Avenue gown and millinery house, and that means a considerable reduction in income. But Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill just can't help it. She was born to be a cop, and she is going to meet her fate with a smile.

The new police-woman was a Red Cross worker during the war. She is well educated, having gone to a convent in Elmira after finishing the public schools here. She is a member of the Thawagaw Democratic Club in Yorkville, and is interested in politics from the woman's point of view. In her new work, she is particularly interested in welfare work among young girls, and she hopes to get an assignment that will give her a chance to visit the dance halls and see how young girls are protected there.

When she found that it was possible for her to join the Police Department—even though she was handicapped at the start—by being born a girl—Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill started to learn the things a police-woman should know. For months she went to a preparatory school four nights a week. The other three nights in the week she fitted up her home as a station house and she practiced being a police-woman, using her father and mother and two brothers and a sister as other actors in the game. It was great sport for all of them, as the whole family had become imbued with the idea that sister "must get on the force."

She says she got her idea of taking the examination from reading the stories of crime and police work in the newspapers. She saw the need of just such a police-woman as she is prepared to be and decided it was her duty to go into the work.

Her physical perfection is due to the fact that she is a lover of outdoor sports. She swims and plays tennis and golf whenever she has the chance. But her beauty is a gift. Even the pretty girls of Yorkville admit that Mary Isabelle Agnes O'Neill is a perfect beauty.

SIDE TALKS.
By Ruth Cameron.

IS THIS A GOOD METHOD!

The family was enjoying the Indian summer breeze on the porch. Mother was reading the paper, father smoking his after dinner cigar, the two older children chatting about school work, Dorothy, the youngest, was playing with her doll.

"From somewhere in the neighborhood a child set up a whining, petulant cry.

"What's all the racket?" someone asked.

"Sounds like the noise Dorothy makes when she doesn't want to go to the store," remarked father pointedly.

In The Midst of All That Peace.

Dorothy looked up from her play with a hurt expression. "I don't think that's fair, papa," she declared indignantly, "I wasn't whining now."

"No," said her father sternly almost angrily, "but that's just the sort of noise I've heard you make when you didn't want to do something you were asked to." And forthwith he began an exaggerated imitation of the sort of thing to which he referred. "That's the way you sound."

Quick tears sprang to the child's eyes. "It isn't fair, it isn't fair," she whispered hotly to herself.

Neighbors stopping in created a happy diversion and the subject was dropped.

Shaming the Children.

What do you think of dealing with childish derelictions?

I have heard this father hold forth at length on the subject with a considerable degree of conviction.

He believes in "shaming children out of their faults." And the shaming process consists in continually hounding them in regard to the fault, bringing it up at times like I have illustrated when the fault isn't in evidence, talking about it, mocking it, impressing it upon the child at every conceivable opportunity.

Outrages Their Sense of Justice.

Of course father's idea is that, given a chance to see how hateful the fault appears to others, the child will be shamed out of it. But it doesn't work that way as a rule. Children are sensitive, the hurt of the ridicule is apt to blind them to its justice.

I prefer the opposite way. I believe that a word of commendation on some occasion when the fault has been overcome for the time being, is worth any amount of sarcastic comment on the failing at other times.

Just Folks.

JIM JOHNSON.

Jim Johnson wasn't much to see. No swell aristocrat was he. No stylish clothes he wore. He never owned a pair of spats. He had no use for high silk hats or butlers at his door. A suit some one might give to him was plenty good enough for Jim.

Jim Johnson was no learned man. His grammar never smoothly ran. His "did" was always "done." You'd say: "I say," he'd say: "I seen."

I think you gather what I mean. He was no polished son.

He fished and hunted all year through and made his living by it, too.

That power divine which shapes our ends In curious ways provides us friends, and so it was with Jim; Each summer to his village came, Great men of wealth and wordly fame.

To hunt and fish with him, And they would sit the whole night through To hear him tell them what he knew.

Jim knew the stars, the birds, the trees, The habits of the honey bees, And all of nature's lore; He knew a thousand secrets hid From men who always say: "I did." And here is something more: These polished sons of life rejected To hear the stories that he voiced.

They loved him. Underneath the rough Exterior and his manner gruff They saw the soul of him. Nature had taught him all he knew. And in spite of haws critics view, Had made a man of Jim.

The man who knows what you don't know Always has something to bestow.

An Amazing Story From Real Life

"THE FOOL'S AWAKENING"

The tremendous popular clamor for stories of true realism taken from the lives of everyday human beings—the absorbingly interesting experiences of actual people—has been answered by numerous magazines whose amazing success is entirely due to this democratic demand for stories of the people, by the people and for the people. The huge number of their readers, which is estimated at over five million, is rapidly increasing month by month, with the result that the "true story," "true romances," "real life," and "confessions" type of narratives have revolutionized the entire magazine world.

This great ready-made audience is YOURS for the asking, when you see "The Fool's Awakening," for here is the dramatization of the true story of a man's confession—a vivid page from real life, torn out of a Russian nobleman's diary by a humble chauffeur who used the account of another's terrible experience, during the horrors of the Russian revolution, to benefit himself. The man impersonated the Russian and finally confessed his deception, after meeting with numerous adventures and nearly wrecking his life and the happiness of the woman he loved.

This true narrative has been remarkably presented to the public by William J. Locke in his famous novel, "The Tale of Triona," and pictured with supreme skill by Metro. Every angle of intense human interest and gripping appeal that has won the vast following of these five million readers is in "The Fool's Awakening."

This amazing film will be the feature at the Majestic Theatre to-night. It will follow another one of those mission in back again to the standard price, 20 cents. The complete shows nightly.

Are all Diseases One Capable of One Cure?

What is disease? Is it possible that all diseases are really one, and one antidote might be discovered to cure every ill?

That is the startling theory of Mr. R. R. McDonagh, F.R.C.S., discussed in the World recently by Mr. Johnston Abraham, the famous surgeon. Mr. Johnston Abraham believes that this theory may be the beginning of a new creative crisis in medicine.

"Disease," he writes, "if Mr. McDonagh's thesis be accepted, is simply a successful attempt on the part of the invading organism to rob the protective particles in the blood of their free electricity; and recovery from disease is a reversal of this process. Due to the protective particles finally getting the upper hand, the invading organism by reaping this electricity.

It will thus be seen that the idea of a general protective substance which resists generally. The idea of cure would be to every case organic illness the strengthening this substance; and, given certain conditions, the antidote
