Peter Rabbit Hears All About Grubby Gopher's Cheek Pockets

By THORNTON W. BURGESS.
Peter Rabbit always is interested in pockets. He always has been. The only people of his acquaintance with sizable pockets are Striped Chipmunk, with a big pocket on the inside of each cheek and Mrs. Possum, with a great, big pocket in which she carries her babies. So the moment Digger the Badger mentioned the fact that out in the far west Grubby Gopher has big pockets, Peter's curiosity fairly boiled over. He wanted to know right away what kind of pockets they were.
"What kind of pockets?" repeated Badger, pretending he didn't understand. "Why, just pockets — big pockets."

"How many?" cried Peter.
"Two," replied Badger.
"Then they must be in his cheeks," cried Peter. "Tell me, Mr. Badger, are they in his cheeks?"
"Of course," replied Digger testily. "Where else would they be?"
"Well," said Peter, "Mrs. Possum has a big pocket, and it isn't in either cheek. What does Grubby use his pockets for?"
"For the same purpose that Striped Chipmunk uses his," said Digger.

nothing compared to what Grubby Gopher can carry in his pockets. Grubby is no beauty at best, but when he has those pockets stuffed full of food he is about the worst-looking fellow I know of."

"How does he put the food in his pockets?" demanded Peter.
"Pushes it in with his hands, of course," replied Digger. "Some folks seem to think that he used those pockets for carrying the dirt out of his tunnels. But that isn't so. He pushes the dirt ahead of him, and so out. His pockets are simply for carrying food. My, but that fellow has a short temper. He is positively ugly."
