

SOMETHING ABOUT ANIMAL LIFE

NOVEMBER CANADIAN MAGAZINE

The Terror of The Air, a wild duck story, by Charles G. D. Roberts, will be one of the features of the November "Canadian Magazine." Professor Roberts' animal stories are eagerly sought after by English and United States publishers, and these stories are all Canadian in character and setting.

Wild-Fowling in Manitoba, by Edwyn Sandys, that prince of sporting writers, will be another feature. Mr. Sandys brightens up all his work with a delightful humour, and he never writes of what he does not know. This is really an account of an expedition to Lake Manitoba.

La Foule of the Caribou, by Casimir Dickson, will describe the annual migration northward of this interesting inhabitant of our northern districts. Now that the fable of our ice-bound territories is disappearing, the huntsman is moving farther and farther north and much information is coming south.

The Misled Collie is the title of a magnificent story by W. A. Fraser, who shares with Thompson-Seton and Professor Roberts the glory of being one of the great animal story writers of the world. There are no workers in this field, with the exception of Kipling and perhaps one other, who can compare with these three gifted Canadians.

Other Features. Besides these "animal" features, the November number will contain the usual illustrated articles, short stories, poems and departments.

The Christmas Number will be worthy of special consideration.

For 1906 an excellent Australian story, by Mrs. Campbell Praed, has been secured. This will run through the year and should prove attractive.

AN INDEX TO VOLUME 25 WILL BE MAILED ON APPLICATION.
