Bulkeley Valley farmers and at the same time proof of what can be done west of the Rockies in the way of grain-growing. Oats and barley and occasional small areas devoted to potatoes and roots were also noted with satisfaction.

Up to the present time Dean Klinck says that very little has been done in the cultivation of grasses and clovers but wherever tried in an experimental way the district has proven well adapted. In this as well as in other sections visited the same difficulty of scattered settlements presented itself. Practically an impossibility to secure land close to railways had hindered development to an alarming degree in the Bulkeley Valley. Dean Klinck, however, urges the importance of more attention being given to the live stock end of the rural industry. A settled valley well adapted for the production of grains, grasses and root crops is notably suitable for mixed for the production. notably suitable for mixed farming, he says. Pre-eminently a live stock country, it is also a country in which the necessary crops will grow to splendid advantage, is Dean Klinck's summing up of the Bulkeley Valley and tributary districts.

He observed practically similar conditions in the districts of Hudson's Hope, Giscombe Portage, Valley of the Crooked River, Pack River, Parsnip River and Fort St. John. In conclusion he stated that settlement would progress more rapidly and production this year would have been considerably greater had it not been for the lack of transportation facilities. The extension of such means would eventuate in the stated that settlement would product the stated that settlement would be a settlement would be a settlement would be settlement would be a would eventuate in a tremendous increase in production and with a road through to the coast immense tonnage would be assured for the journey west. As it is now Pouce Coupe grain has to be hauled over a seventy-mile trail and five days for the trip to Grande Prairie in Alberta is required, from which it will be readily seen where the profit goes.
