

A

I think the time has come when these things should be understood without words, that we should take them for granted. A man does not make an announcement every other day that his wife is virtuous; he assumes that she is; just as an Englishman assumes that he is the best thing on earth and the rest of the world are damned silly if they don't acknowledge it.