DEWART OPPOSED TO AN EXTENSION

Says Practice Not Constitutional, and Alone Votes Against Bill.

READY FOR A CONTEST

Shows Position Government Takes.

With 58 members of the Ontario ing against him, H. Hartley Dewart, Southwest Toronto, stood up alone been termed "the love feast."

Mr. Dewart advanced many reasons as to why he objected to the measure tion. among others that it was too indefinite as to time and that it was not good constitutional practice. He was given no support in any form, his leader even being obliged to say that opportunity had been given for such objection and that in view of the fact that it had not come he believed among others that it was too indefin-

"H. Hartley Dewart, South West Toronto, criticized the bill, "I am compelled to dissent from the idea of an indefinite extension of the life of the assembly by members who happen to constitute the house at any particular time." he said. He held that such action would be contrary to the plain spirit of the constitution as settled by the British North America Act, if not clearly in violation of it.

The promptness with which the prime minister accepted the suggesion of an extension was, to say least, a little unexpected, and no opportunity had been given to consider the terms of the bill before its introduction, nor had there been any sign of the unanimous assent of the as-

The term of the extension should be definite and therefore the time limit of extension should be for one year, leaving it to the legislature to deal with the matter year by year. We all trust that the war will be diverting the energies of the people from carrying on the war," he said.

Time to Settle Up.

It was impossible to foretell what problems might arise in the next two years, and therefore the present plans should not be carried out in law. By the proposed extension the government itself to the people. Under the amendment the province would be absolutely tied to the personnel of any adminis-tration that might be selected without In view of the many deaths the necessity of any minister going to the people for endorsement. "It is really the establishment of an irresponsible oligarohy," he declared.

Mr. Dewart referred to it as a "jughandled scheme, because while the province is tied the government is to have its hands free." He dealt with the question of patronage, and said the system should be abolished as a term of the extension agreement. He characterized the civil service reform bill as introduced by Hon. I. B. Lucas, attorney-general, as "camouflage" and as not being curative. Drawing his arguments to a close he said: "I have therefore, after the fullest consideration, come to the conclusion that I cannot accept this hurried agreement that has been made between the premier and the leader of the opposition because of the lack of consideration.

In states adopted such a measure it could be carried out successfully. The bill was sent to the legal committee.

Venereal Disease Discussed.

Hon. I. B. Lucas, attorney-general, moved the second reading of a bill for the prevention of venereal disease, saying he had nothing further to add to the statements made when the bill was introduced. William Jaques, Haldimand, referred to the bill as second to none in importance that have ever been brought before the house, not excepting the Ontario Temperance Act. He spoke of the progress the province had made against other diseases, and thought it could grapple successfully with this.

Dr. E. Jessop, St. Catharines, agreed cannot accept this hurried agreement that has been made between the premier and the leader of the opposition because of the lack of consideration Reply of Sir William Hearst because of the lack of consideration that is apparent of the important continuous to the principle of the bill but thought stitutional issues and the failure to deal with and safeguard other matters of policy which are of the utmost

"I am not at all afraid of the arrangements that have been made," he said and he had no fear of an election being "sprung." "I regret that e proposed the bill. Sir William Hearst, in reply, made there should be any objection and it plain that he had nothing to fear that it became necessary to discuss the question," he added. He had con-

The government had that the provisions of the British North America Act would not be violated. However, he said that there was any substantial body of sent an election act. The siggestion had come from his political opponent cond reading of the bill to extend the life of the present legislature until after the close of the war, and in so doing said that in view of the explanations that had been made when planations that had been accepted as coming from him and he could not understand the object to the member for south-west Toronto had in objecting to the arrangement.

Only One Conclusion. There was only one conclusion that ould have been reached and that was that every member was in sympathy with the proposal to extend the life of the legislature. When Mr. Dewart spoke recently in Hamilton he had pledged his support to Mr. Proudfoot, Sir William said, and in view of that his present stand was not consistent. "I have not heard one word of criticism among the people outside the house," he said, and then he repeated many of the reasons why he had accepted the proposal. Chief among these was that of the expense that would be involved, then it was not destrable to divert attention from the great task of winning the war. if anything too short. Sir William believed that to force an election immediately after the return of the soldier would be most unfair. There was little choice as to time for an election in this country, there being but two months Further, it was a time when Conserva tive, Liberal and Unionish should be forgotten and all men pledged together for the country's good. In conclusion, he said the bill was over inside a year, and then a new before the house, that it would not be been accepted if it had not been for the genuine spirit shown by the leader of the opposition when he introduced it.

The man who gets in the car at this stop is not the man who gets out at the next stop--not if he has his fare--not ordinarily.

In other words, if we take it by averages, the first passenger to board is the first passenger to alight.

This would seem to indicate that when a passenger boards a car he should make his way to the front and not linger in the rear. When the time comes for him to alight, if he is well to the front, he has a shorter way to go through the car, and he will not encounter other people getting on, as would be the case if he used the rear door.

He will convenience himself and help others by moving to the front of the car when he boards and leaving by the front door.
