Absolute Closing of the Offering of the Encyclopaedia Britannica (At Regular Prices)
With the Complete Century Dictionary FREE

UNLESS YOU ACT IMMEDIATELY ON READING THIS NOTICE
YOU WILL MISS THE BIGGEST BOOK BARGAIN EVER OFFERED

If you read this too late to call at one of the six stores (see below), telegraph or telephone to have a set of The Encyclopaedia Britannica with The Century Dictionary free reserved for you. At the same time cut out and mail the reservation blank in the lower corner of this page. This is the last announcement, and, therefore, this is your last opportunity to order.

Or drop in today and see the books. This is the last day of the sale. Come in and learn all about the prices and the convenient terms—$1.00 down and small month-by-month payments which you will never miss. Come in and inspect the beautiful bindings which have been so much admired. Owing to the scarcity of leather such fine bindings cannot again be manufactured for The Britannica.

You certainly ought also to see The Century in its revolutionary form, all bound in one easy-to-consult volume by means of the Automatic Flexible Back—an entirely new idea in bookbinding. This is the work which you get free. The Complete Century Dictionary, latest Revised and Enlarged Edition, sold separately at $31.50, but absolutely without charge if you order The Britannica today.

If you are one of the many hundreds who are "thinking it over," we urge you to act now—to decide this minute, while you have this newspaper in your hand—either to drop in and leave your order or telephone to have a set reserved for you.

You need both works, and you have never had such a wonderful chance to get them—the two works at the price of one! With these two monumental works in your home you will have the largest body of authoritative knowledge and general all-round useful information ever published—a virtual "corner" on the essential knowledge of mankind—and particularly useful for reference during the war.

But you must order today if you want to get The Britannica at regular prices and for $1.00 down, and The Century for nothing at all. Certainly this is a tempting offer. It is so tempting that The London Advertiser, realizing that hundreds of its readers would be very glad to avail themselves of it arranged with the publishers for a temporary exhibit and sale at six stores here in Western Ontario.

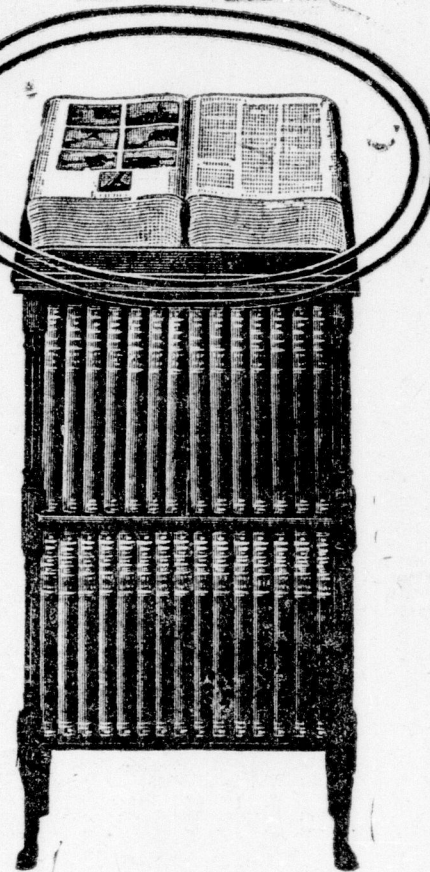

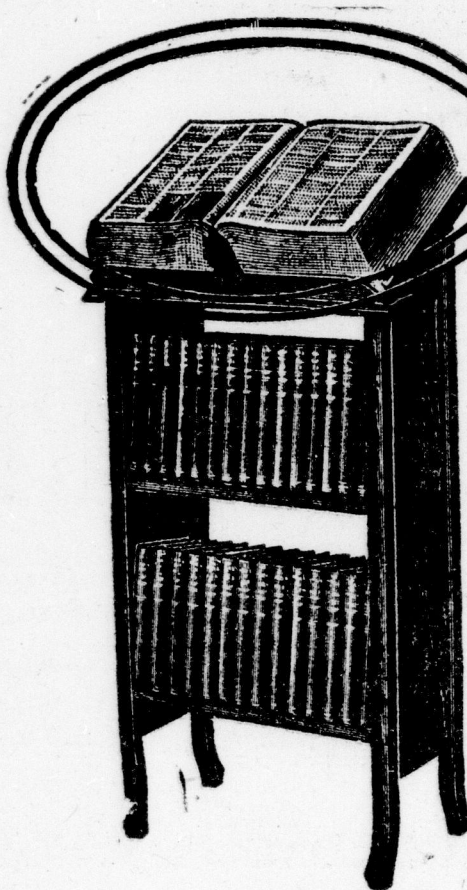

This arrangement, so favorable to the public, is now at an end. The bargain is for you to accept—but, if interested, you must act now or not at all.

You get a clear, thorough and agreeably written account of any branch of knowledge, or any subject in science, history, art or literature, etc. You can learn about it as much as anyone not a specialist will ever want to know.

The Century with its 600,000 definitions of English words may be compared to a rapid-fire knowledge-gun for quick attack in any skirmish with the battalions of strange words, phrases and expressions, native and foreign, that confront us from day to day in business, in reading, or in study.

Each work is therefore a helpmate and companion to the other, and the opportunity to have both together, paying only the regular price for The Britannica and getting The Century absolutely free, is one of those rare opportunities that only come once in a lifetime.

"THE BOOK OF BOOKS."

Rightly regarded as the first requisite for any reference library, the Encyclopaedia Britannica is, for the small private library, the book of books. The new 11th edition is in all respects admirable. So far as I have been able to judge, the articles have been compiled by contributors who are masters of their subjects—very often the greatest living authority.

(Signed) W. VAUGHAN,
Secretary McGill University.

"FILLS A PLACE WHICH NO OTHER WORK CAN FILL"

I find it most difficult to find language, even in the Britannica itself, to express adequately my appreciation of the innumerable excellent features of the work. The whole production is in a class by itself and fills a place in the literature of the world which no other work can fill.

(Signed) C. L. TORT.

"AN INVALUABLE TREASURE."

Day by day I am finding a larger use for the vast store of lucid and concise knowledge packed within the neat and handsome volumes. It is, indeed, an invaluable treasure, and in the India paper edition is, like many other good things, put up in a small parcel.

(Signed) H. W. FRASER, D.D.,
Pastor First Presbyterian Church.

"THE BRITANNICA'S 'ONLY FAULT.'"

I am the proud possessor of the new edition of the Britannica. The variety of forms in which it has been issued is a splendid feature. I am simply amazed at the amount of information to be found on any subject. Every article refers one to many other special articles, and suggests such an exhaustive bibliography that a splendid course can be worked out for any line of reading. The only fault I have with it is that I am being asked too often to lend volumes to people who see the set in my office and become fascinated by it. This is a nuisance from my point of view. Two volumes are out now, and when I want to look up a subject of course it is in either of those two volumes. However, I try to be patient, knowing that not many in this town have received such a great literary treasure.

(Signed) G. QUINCY WARNER, B.A.,
Christ Church.

"A GREAT JOY TO THE HOUSEHOLD."

The flexible sheep India paper edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica is a great joy to our household. The volumes can be held so easily in one hand that they are in use ten times for once that the ponderous tomes of the ninth edition style would be. To comment on the subject matter is to commend it highly.

(Signed) A. H. PERFECT (M.D.)

"SON OF TEN SPENDS HOURS WITH IT."

I have not yet used the Encyclopaedia Britannica very much, but I have found it most interesting and instructive. What has struck me as most remarkable is the interest which my son, a lad of scarcely ten years, takes in many of the articles. He spends hours with it.

(Signed) J. M. WALLACE.

"ATTAINS THE IDEAL."

The Encyclopaedia Britannica has exceeded all my expectations, both in beauty of workmanship, and also in the depth and completeness of the information contained therein. To one in the mining engineering profession, who of necessity cannot carry about a large weight of books, such a library in a nutshell as the new Britannica attains the ideal.

(Mining Engineer)

What British Scholars Say of the Century---the Work You Get FREE

FROM SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,

Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, London. "I have carefully examined the Century Dictionary, and on a good many points relating to my own art with eminently satisfactory results, and, therefore, can say that it contains most valuable, comprehensive, and reliable general information on the subject of music. And I have not yet met with a dictionary which affords so much general information."

FROM SIDNEY LEE,

Editor of the Dictionary of National Biography. "The Century Dictionary is a most useful possession. I know no work as yet published in its entirety which can compare with it in completeness of information, or as far as I have been able to test it, in accuracy. The range covered by its definitions and pictorial illustrations of technical terms, embraces, it seems to me, every branch of knowledge—literary, artistic and scientific. The general circulation of so scholarly and exhaustive a work must promote the national welfare by reason of its dissemination of precise knowledge and full knowledge about matters of which incorrect and incomplete knowledge commonly prevails to the injury of the nation's intelligence."

FROM SIR RICHARD JEBB,

Formerly Regius Professor of Greek, Cambridge. "I do not know any book which can compare with it in its two-fold character as a dictionary of the English language and an encyclopaedia of well-digested information. As a complete and compact work of reference, both on words and on things, it has no rival with which I am acquainted. The wealth and excellence of the illustrations are above praise."

FROM REV. A. M. SAYCE,

Professor of Assyriology, Oxford. "I am well acquainted with the Century Dictionary and its excellence, and have never found it to fall me when I have referred to it from time to time. Indeed, I do not know of any other working dictionary of the English language which is at once so full and yet so concise in its information, and the accuracy of which can be so thoroughly trusted. When I have had occasion to use it, it has always given me just what was wanted."

FROM JAMES BRYCE,

Formerly British Ambassador at Washington. "The Century Dictionary is a masterpiece of condensation. An examination of it fills me with a strong sense of the care bestowed to insure accuracy. It is a work of exceptional value and utility, which I find most helpful in many ways."

FROM AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, K.C.,

Former Chief Secretary for Ireland, Author, Formerly Lord Rector of Glasgow University. "The quotations employed to illustrate the meanings of the words are not the hackneyed ones which have done duty before in earlier dictionaries, but come fresh from the reading of the lexicographer, and are in themselves not only apposite but delightful. It is almost impossible whilst searching for a particular word to avoid resting the eye upon some vigorous and occasionally some most valuable passage from a writer whose works you ought to know, but do not."

FROM SIR EDWARD B. TYLOR,

Formerly Professor of Anthropology, Oxford. "After carefully examining the Century Dictionary as to terms used in Anthropology, I find them quite adequately treated, as indeed was to be expected under Professor Whitney's editorship. To bring what is really a condensed universal encyclopaedia within the limits of space and cost in private as well as public libraries, is a new undertaking, here carried out with remarkable success."

FROM EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D.,

Formerly Professor of English Literature, University of Dublin.

"The nature of my work has obliged me to form acquaintance with almost every important dictionary illustrating our language from the fifteenth century onwards, and I had some small part as a contributor to two very valuable dictionaries of recent date. Without doubt, the Century Dictionary unites in a higher degree than any other work with which I am acquainted the best qualities of a dictionary, full, learned and exact with those of a condensed encyclopaedia of knowledge. The etymologies and definitions, as far as I am competent to form an opinion, have been studied and set down with thorough scholarship and accuracy. The pictorial illustrations often effect what cannot be effected by verbal definitions."

OUR LAST WORD

The Encyclopaedia Britannica has never been published merely to make money. Ever since the first edition in 1768, The Britannica's watchword has been "utility." That this ideal has been attained in the present eleventh edition is attested by the purchasers themselves—by the 200,000 people who have bought and are using it. You would be just as enthusiastic as they are if you owned a set. It would be more useful to you now that the world is at war than at any other time.

You have a chance to get this work of universal utility under extraordinary conditions. Until this offer anyone who bought The Britannica and also wanted The Century had to pay for it. The price, separately, is $31.50, but if you order The Britannica through The Advertiser, and if your order is received before the day closes, you will get The Century free of charge. This is a war bargain, and it arises out of war conditions in the publishing trade.

Therefore now is the time to order The Encyclopaedia Britannica so that you can equip yourself not only with this most useful work of general information, but also with the finest English dictionary—a work which supplements and enhances the value of the encyclopaedia. The two together give you access to 5,000,000 facts.

But if you do not act in the matter today this chance will be lost, and it will not come to you again.
