POWDER SHIPPED AS SPAGHETTI TO GET BY THE CUSTOMS
Ruse of Turks to Secure Ammunition Was for a Time Successful
Rome, June 15.—Pierce powder moulded to resemble spaghetti so as to deceive the French customs authorities, who have been instructed to prevent the movement of contraband arms and ammunition on the Tripoli-Tunis frontier, is the latest means whereby the Turkish communists have succeeded in introducing into Tunis and thence to the Turkish camps in Tripoli and Cyrenaica the raw material for bombs and cartridges.
Powder manufactured into spaghetti, is considered here the limit of human ingenuity. When the discovery was first announced it was not believed, and it was only when the first specimens of spaghetti reached Rome that the general staff got busy and the Italian foreign office hastened to notify the French authorities of its use to which the new spaghetti was destined.
The discovery was purely accidental. The correspondent of the Republican paper Ragione was watching the French authorities examining large consignments of macaroni when it occurred to him that it was a little strange that such a world-famous Italian staple should reach the French-African coast via Hamburg. He bought a pound of the spaghetti awaiting delivery and the secret was out.

WHOLESALE CHEATING OF RAILWAYS IS FOUND
Vienna, June 15.—The authorities have made a surprise inspection of the passenger trains running into Lentz and arrested no fewer than seventy-six passengers who were traveling either without tickets or with tickets which had already been used. A dozen railway guards were also arrested and will be charged with conspiring with the passengers to defraud the state railways.
The guards declare that they are unable to carry out the regulations about inspecting tickets in the corridor carriages while the trains are under way, as the passengers threaten them with revolvers and knives and then jump out of the train on to the line when it slows down before reaching Lentz, so that they may not be stopped at the station exit.

TOOK SOME BELIEVING
Gifford Pinchoat, at his brother's home in Park avenue, New York, listened quietly to a political story that was being submitted to him for verification by a political reporter.
When the reporter finished his narrative, Mr. Pinchoat laughed and said: "I'll reply to that as the old Italian peasant replied to the statement that his fellow-countryman loved birds too well to ever eat them."
"Well, I don't mind believing that myself," the old man said, "but there's a good many who wouldn't."

MRS. KEPPEL WELCOMED BY SOCIETY
Keen Competition for Invitations To Her Sunday Afternoons
SMART ONES FOUND THERE
How a Wealthy Baronet's Mother Is Seeking a Wife For Her Son—Earl Grey's Trip to South Africa—Canadians in Europe
(Times' Special Correspondence)
London, June 5.—No one need think for one moment that Mrs. George Keppel means to take a back seat in society now she has returned to it. That's not her "little way" at all, and anyhow, she would soon be brought into the front row by her friends, for at present no one can approach her in brilliance and wit of conversation. Also she has made up her mind that her daughter Violet shall make a good match, and there is no one who "knows the ropes" as well as she does.
Her clever friends and every really clever man and woman in society is her friend—have persuaded her to start a salon. She has given an informal invitation to all these clever folk to drop in on Sundays after lunch for coffee, cigarettes and conversation. Any amount of strategy is being employed by some people to manoeuvre an invitation out of Mrs. Keppel for these "Three O's," as they are called, for to be included in the party stamps you at once as a bright talker and a brainy person in general, but the test is severe, and many there are who fail to pass it.
More chatter, gossip and bores are rigidly excluded; it is conversation "all capitals," as some remarked the other day that the guests will hear and be expected to contribute.
Lady Naylor-Leyland's big ball, which she will give at the end of this month at Hyde Park House, is already going on the name of a "prime of entertainment." The fact is, Lady Naylor-Leyland is excessively anxious to get her young son comfortably and suitably married, lest he should fall into the numerous matrimonial pitfalls that lie around the paths of London's young bloods.
She has been an exceedingly devoted mother, and does not want all her care and trouble to be rewarded by a present of a daughter-in-law from the back row of the chorus or anything of the sort. Her son, Sir Edward Naylor-Leyland, is so very good-looking and so frightfully rich, of course, that the pitiable gape rather wider for him than for others.
Accordingly, all the prettiest, most suitable "brides" will be paraded before his eyes on this eventful night, and Lady Naylor-Leyland is doing her best to make sure that her young fancy may be caught, and she can take a well earned rest.
A new and hospitably inclined Lady Naylor-Leyland would be a tremendous acquisition to London society. Hyde Park House, that magnificent palace looking out over the park, is an ideal spot for entertaining, and what she is doing at the moment is the death of the last baronet.
Canadians in Europe
Canadians seem to provide most of the sensations in English political life and everyone is interested in the doings of Harry Symonds, K.C., of Toronto, who has been chosen by the Unionist party to oppose Sir John Simon the solicitor-general at Walthamstow. It requires no little courage to come into the field against such an opponent, who is immensely popular in the division and whose popularity is founded on his unequivocal fairness for political matters and high endeavor on behalf of his constituents.
Mr. Symonds is, however, wowing the constituency in no half-hearted fashion, and Mrs. Symonds, who is the daughter of Samuel Rolin Henson, ex-conservative M.P. for Stratford, Ontario, is giving great assistance. In this she is following the example of wives of other Canadian M.P.s, whose thorough interest in the political fortunes of their husbands has frequently been commented on. This week Mr. and Mrs. Symonds gave a reception to nearly 4,000 of the constituents, which was one of the biggest things ever done in the borough.
Mr. Symonds, who spent the Whitnuntide holidays in Jersey, intends to reside permanently in England. He belongs to an old Devonshire family and his father, for many years, carried on business near the scene of the present fight. Walthamstow is one of the biggest seats in England in point of numbers, and in constituency containing such a large working class electorate the fact that Mr. Symonds has occasionally acted as mediator in labor differences in Canada is an advantage. The many Canadians who are helping him have not been slow to advance the impartiality and sobriety of judgment which have enabled him to command the confidence of both parties to disputes arising in connection with railway employment, as reasons why he should be elected to represent such a large industry as Walthamstow.
"England impresses one as being just a big park," says Professor J. Rutherford, of the University of Saskatchewan, who is in the home country on a visit combining business with study. The professor has not been slow since his arrival, but has not recovered. I met him at a friend's house prior to his departure for the continent.
"I am delighted with England," he told me, "but here and there are a few corners which appear to be unattended; on the whole it is beautifully kept. The herds of cattle and flocks of sheep luxuriating in a wealth of grass make one feel that England's agriculture is being conducted on a very safe basis. The good roads stimulate one to go and do likewise." Coming to the heart of the empire one cannot but feel that the mother country is watching, with keen interest, the manner in which her children beyond the seas are conducting themselves. She is proud of their achievements and notices, with justifiable pride, the marks of loyalty and respect they so frequently manifest towards her.
Mr. Rutherford will visit France, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Austria and Hungary with a view to making observations on the means employed to develop and conserve the natural resources and increase the efficiency of the people. He will also study the elementary and second-

Miss Edna Sutherland, a dramatic reader from Winnipeg, is visiting friends here. Miss Matheson, daughter of Archdeacon Matheson of Winnipeg, has arrived in London.
The Bishop of Nova Scotia and the Dean of British Columbia are expected to arrive in London on June 15. The primary object of their visit is to attend the annual conference of the Anglican Communion, which is being held at the Cecil Rhodes at Capetown and afterwards to go for a long tour through the Canadian West. He is also a visitor for a short period in 1906. Some political significance was at first attributed to his visit, but it is now said that it is purely of a private nature. He will be absent from England for several months.

BLACK DAYS FOR THEATRE IN LONDON
Death in High Places or Labor Trouble Always to Affect Receipts
AUTUMN ARRANGEMENTS
A Chat About Plays and Theatrical People in the Spot Light in England—Hammerstein at Last Owns Up He is Beaten
(Times' Special Correspondence)
London, June 5.—For many years the Princess Theatre has stood in Oxford street, a desolate, discolored, moth-eaten building. Nevertheless, it can boast a career of considerable brilliancy. As a theatre it dates back to 1840, although it was first used for promenade concerts and subsequently for opera. In 1845, Charlotte Cushman appeared there in "Fazio," and immediately after her first appearance, wrote to her mother "all my successes put together since I have been upon the stage would not come near my success in London."
Charles Kean had, at the Princess, his series of Shakespearean seasons when he astonished and attracted the town by the magnificence of his productions. Wilson Barrett made a fortune there with melodrama and later contrived to lose a good part of it by yielding to his inordinate desire to play Hamlet. Some six or seven years ago, however, the theatre was bought by the intended converting it into a vaudeville house, but the London County Council refused to sanction its opening until the building was entirely reconstructed and thoroughly overhauled. To accomplish this would have entailed an expenditure of a much larger sum than Keith could ever hope to get back during his comparatively brief lease.
So the building was allowed to stand empty and was gradually going from bad to worse. I now look back, however, that it has been bought by the proprietors of the York Hotel, situated a stone's throw distant, and that operations will at once begin for its conversion into a big modern hotel.
Set Back for Box Office
Business at the theatre has again received a decisive setback, owing to the unusually sultry weather and the recrudescence of strike difficulties. As G. B. McLellan said to me the other day, "There never was such a calamity-ridden country as this, theatrically speaking. How managers contrive to avoid the bankruptcy court will always be a mystery to me. If it is not the death of a princeling, it is another labor upheaval that keeps people at home and prevents them from going to any place of entertainment."
McLellan's sarcasm on the subject is easily understood, for he happens to have a share with Lee Shubert in "The Five Frankforters" at the Lyric, and the attendance there is anything but satisfactory.
From nearly every quarter comes a similar story; Tree's Shakespearean Festival, for instance, is not showing particularly brilliant results and I could name quite a number of West End theatres in similar case. Tree, by the way, has been obliged to postpone production of "The Perfect Gentleman," Somerset Maugham's adaptation of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," for a couple of weeks. The interval is to be filled in by a revival of Comyns Carr's version of "Oliver Twist" with Constance Collier, who will arrive just in time, as Nancy. Obviously if the piece catches on Tree will continue its run until the close of the season.
George Alexander has decided to make a word or two respecting the plot may not be amiss. The heroine is a French lady who has drifted apart from her husband, a rather stern and self-centred officer. She gets into the hands of a friend of his, but on the night she has promised to admit him to her room a catastrophe happens. Her husband has borrowed money from a spy who offers to cancel the debt if he will hand over to him the plans of an outlying fortress. The husband, in an access of fury, kills the spy and then the latter up in his chair, puts a pen into his right fingers, and when next morning he is discovered by the servants, it is assumed that his death was the result of a fit.
Strong this, you will acknowledge, and of a kind to offer Alexander and Ethel Irving splendid acting opportunities. The latter up in his chair, put a pen into his right fingers, and when next morning he is discovered by the servants, it is assumed that his death was the result of a fit.
Davies has never yet shown that he possesses much of the true dramatic gift. His composition, but the piece, Du Maurier assures me, is written in his tightest and happiest vein. There is, it appears, a touch of symbolism in the title, intended to imply that the best of women will occasionally wipe their feet upon the fortunate mortals on whom they have bestowed their affections.

As Du Maurier wants to go holiday-making in August and September, he has left his theatre (Wyndham's) to W. H. C. Nation, a seventy-year-old manager with an income of $50,000 a year, who periodically bursts into the dramatic arena in order to produce pieces written by himself. His nightly receipts rarely exceed the modest figure of $25. Nevertheless he is quite content to sit in the wings and applaud his own work. To the ordinary individual it seems rather an odd way of enjoying oneself. But every man to his own particular taste.
Beaten, Says Hammerstein
Oscar Hammerstein has at length confessed himself beaten. His beautiful London Opera House has proved a white elephant and this week he frankly admits he has no longer any hope of making it pay upon present lines. To a friend of mine put the significant question lately: "When does the London season begin?" From which it may be gleaned that he himself has been unable to detect any signs, at his theatre, of its having done so. The truth is that Hammerstein has failed utterly to understand the conditions of operatic enterprise in this country, although he has spent something like a million dollars in a fruitless endeavor to acquire the knowledge. But he has made a good fight.
