Winnipeg Man Admits Crime and Saves Innocent Prisoner.

CONSCIENCE PRICKED HIM

Alfred H. Wood of Winnipeg, Confesses to Outrages For Which J. W. Tollman Awaited Trial—Wood Is Given Two Years and Tollman Is Immediately Set Free—Was Caught Red-Handed.

Winnipeg, Aug. 1.—Pricked by overcharged conscience into an admission of guilt, Alfred H. Wood, aged 29, a thirteenth employed in the C.N.R. shops, who has a wife and children at his home in West Toronto, told Magistrate Daly in court yesterday morning that it was he who so brutally assaulted Mrs. Christina Wilson on Wellington crescent, four weeks ago, and not James Wallace Tollman, who had already been sent up for trial on the charge.

Tollman closely resembled Wood and was arrested some time ago and committed for trial. Other assaults, however, occurred and Wood was caught red-handed two days ago. He was identified by several women whom he had attacked and then made a clean confession.

Wood admitted four other charges of indecent assault and exposure, and the court lost no time in imposing the maximum punishment of two years in the Manitoba Penitentiary, with 36 lashes, 24 during the first year and 12 during the last year of his sentence.

On two other charges he was bound over in the sum of $200 each to appear for sentence when called upon. The prisoner admitted having served 18 months in the Central Prison, Toronto, for theft.

Mrs. Wilson is in a delicate condition and the magistrate congratulated the prisoner that it was not a manslaughter case.

Tollman was set free by Judge Myers, before whom he had been sent for trial.

"BOBS" CUTS OUT OTTAWA.

Is Overcome by Heat at Montreal and Cancels Visit.

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—The keenest disappointment was felt here tonight when word was received from Montreal that Lord Roberts would not be able to come to the capital to-day, having been overcome by heat at Montreal.

Elaborate arrangements had been made for his entertainment. The militia was to have turned out in force to do him honor.

The Canadian Club had secured permission to use the Senate Chamber for a luncheon and was prepared to seat five hundred members.

In addition tickets had been issued to one thousand ladies, who would have witnessed the function from the Senate galleries.

As a social event the luncheon would have been on par with the opening of Parliament.

Every other preparation had been made, decorations were up and stands erected. The City Council were staggered, but sent their condolences to the field marshal with the hope that he would recover and be able to come later.

Cleaves to Leper Wife.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 1.—Determined that he would not be separated from his wife, who is a leper, and has been confined at the county hospital, Brigadier-General David K. Wardwell, retired, veteran of two wars, has stolen her from the institution and rushed her across the Mexican border, where he declares he will live with her until death separates them.

No attempt will be made to bring them back, as the officials say they both prefer to die and their lives if forced to live apart.

Child Drowns in Creek.

Chatham, Aug. 1.—The three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lewis, living near Mitchell's Bay, was drowned by falling into a little creek leading into the bay. She had been gone half an hour when missed.

Hanged at Kamloops.

Kamloops, B. C., Aug. 1.—Francisco Ceddio was hanged in the jail yard here this morning at 9:20 o'clock for the murder of a hotel proprietor's daughter near Greenwood, by blowing up the hotel with dynamite.

London's Celebration.

London, Aug. 1.—The Old Boys' celebration and Mardi Gras carnival next week will, it is expected, attract 25,000 visitors to the city. Advance guards are coming in to-day.

Mishaps That Follow In the Wake of Operations.

OBJECTS LEFT IN THE BODY.

Recorded Cases Show That Tubes, Clamps, Sponges, Towels and Scissors Have Been Forgotten or Overlooked Until Disclosed by Autopsy.

Accidents will happen in the best regulated of operations. Foreign bodies, such as forceps, sponges, towels and gauze pads, are more frequently left in the human body after operations than the public is aware of. To be sure, the number of operations in which this happens is small. It occurs perhaps once or twice in the course of 2,000 operations. Like an eruption of Vesuvius, however, it is likely at any time and has marked the operations of some of the best known surgeons of this city. They say it may occur again notwithstanding the number of schemes which have been devised to prevent it.

No one knows the number of these mishaps, as only in relatively few cases is death followed by an autopsy. The announcement that "the operation was a success, but the patient died," may cover a multitude of sins of omission and commission so far as any one can tell.

One may find in the files of the "Annals of Surgery" the reports of between 150 and 200 cases in which objects used in operations have been left in the body. These objects include tubes, clamps, sponges, towels, forceps, scissors and finger rings. Usually it is a piece of gauze or a sponge that is left in the wound. In 100 cases reported from Europe thirty-one sponges and thirty-three pieces of gauze were left in wounds. In forty-three cases death resulted. In the other sixty-six cases the articles worked their way out after remaining in the body for months and sometimes years or were discovered and removed by operations performed to relieve the pain caused by the movements of these objects.

In one case a surgeon lost his seal ring. It finally pushed its way to the surface of the body of a person on whom he had operated and was returned to its owner. In another pair of forceps circulated about the abdominal cavity of a "case" for four years before being recovered. Pieces of gauze five feet long and a yard wide have been removed from persons on whom operations had been performed.

It seems strange to the layman that anything should be able to escape the surgeon in such a small cavity as is likely to be created in the body in the course of an operation. Especially does it seem impossible that anything should be lost in view of the extreme care taken to prevent it. Many surgeons have worked out methods of procedure for operations with the intention of eliminating the possibility of the loss of anything used. Unfortunately even these have never proved infallible.

The most usual method is to have everything counted by a nurse before the operation begins. Before the wound is closed each article is accounted for by a recount. Some surgeons have had experiences which led them to count the number of persons responsible for the appliances, each to check the counts of all the others. Other surgeons have the gauze pads in packages of half a dozen or a dozen. Only one package is opened at a time, and its contents must be accounted for before the next is opened. Trying tapes to each gauze pad or instrument inserted in a wound is another precaution. A prominent Brooklyn surgeon devised a check system similar to that used by baggage-men. A quantity of glass checks were numbered, there being two of each number, and to each set of duplicates was attached a tape. To every article used in the operation one of these tapes with the check attached was fastened. Whenever, for instance, a piece of gauze was taken from a basin for use one of the checks was removed and placed in the basin. Before the wound was stitched each article represented by these detached checks had to be accounted for.

Notwithstanding such precautions, in four recorded cases large sponges were torn in half while the operation was in progress and one of the halves placed in the wound and lost sight of. When the count was made there was the same number of sponges as at the beginning of the operation. The missing half was forgotten and the wound closed.

A surgeon in describing one of these mishaps says:

"A young surgeon, assisted by an older surgeon, performed the operation. The older one tore a sponge in half and tucked half of it in without saying anything about it. The woman died of shock, and the sponge was removed at the post-mortem examination, much to the surgeon's surprise, as a count of sponges gave the number with which the operation had been begun."

Another way in which a reputable surgeon may be made the victim of this kind of an accident is illustrated in this settlement, made by an American practitioner:

"I have had two unfortunate experiences in regard to foreign bodies remaining in the abdominal cavity, one occurring a few years ago when using the old fashioned sponges, the patient dying from general peritonitis. One occurred about three years ago in which a small gauze sponge was left, the patient making a good recovery, but on a reappearance of the disease a year after the sponge was found on exploration. This is an accident to be regretted. I have always been fortunate in reference to forceps and instruments."

FALLING HAIR STOPPED. Baldness Cured by Destroying the Parasitic Germ That Causes It. Baldness follows falling hair, falling hair follows dandruff, and dandruff is the result of a germ digging its way into the scalp to the root of the hair where it saps the vitality of the hair. To destroy this germ is to prevent as well as cure dandruff, falling hair, and lastly, baldness. There is only one preparation known to do that, Neubre's Herpicide, an entirely new, scientific discovery. Wherever it has been tried it has proven wonderfully successful. It can't be otherwise, because it utterly destroys the dandruff germ. "You destroy the cause, you remove the effect."

Sold by leading druggists. Two sizes, 50c and $1. Send 10c in stamps for sample to the Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

An Unfortunate
Family

A story of the trials of a family in which many sensational and interesting situations arise.

"Yes, he is, Miss Kate, honey! I don't know all about Jack's 'feeling' for him! High, honey, ain't Jack been own man? I Marsie Arley ever since they was boys together! An' didn't Jack wait on him when he was at college, and one Miss pay extra for him? Deed she did, honey! For my blessed Hebbely Lord, did she! An' he knows all 'bout Jack's 'feeling' for him, and he knows Jack 'boid follow him to the end of the world, an' jump off after him! Lord, love your heart, Miss Kate, they ain't no dog marster's got, loves him more faithful 'n brother Jack does."

Kate sighed very deeply, with a preoccupied air, but answered:

"I will speak to Major Clifton in your behalf, Honey—now go and ask Mrs. Mercer to come to me in my own chamber."

And Catherine passed on to her own apartment, and Henry went her errand. Very soon the housekeeper entered the chamber, and found Catherine busily engaged among linen, stockings, cravats, and other "belongings."

"I want your assistance, Mrs. Mercer, in preparing Major Clifton's wardrobe this week."

"My dear child, I am so sorry! But I have been waiting for an hour, to speak to you. The truth is, I have just got a letter from my son-in-law, who writes that my daughter is very, extremely low, with the bilious plagues, and wants me to come right over to L— immediately, without loss of time, and I thought I would ask you for a leave of absence, till she got better."

"And, certainly, I could not refuse it, Mrs. Mercer. I am sorry your daughter is ill."

"And my dear child, I was going to ask you if you could let me have one of the makes this morning, and I would send it back to-morrow."

"The weather is too cold, and the journey too arduous for a woman of your age to perform it in that manner. Tell Dandy to put the horses to the carriage for you."

"The carriage, dear honey, I shouldn't think of such a thing. As many years as I have been living in the family, I never need the carriage once. The mule will do very well, if you will let me order him!"

"Mrs. Mercer, why not? I shall not let it to-day. To-morrow Dandy can bring it home."

"God bless you, child! you are so good hearted! It is a sin, too, to leave your son, so thronged as you are with work."

"No I can get—get through," replied Kate, with the same troubled, preoccupied air that had marked her answer to the first question. "Mrs. Mercer soon after took leave and departed."

An hour after this, Catherine heard Major Clifton enter the hall, and come up stairs. To her surprise, he paused before her chamber door and rapped. When she opened it, he said:

"Will you favor me with your company in my study for a few minutes, Mrs. Clifton?"

Catherine immediately laid down her work and followed him.

When they reached the study, he set her a chair near the writing-table, and dropping into another chair, he turned to her and said:

"Mrs. Clifton, I told you, some weeks since, that at my departure, and during my indefinite absence, I should be obliged to leave this estate under your charge."

"Yes," answered Catherine attentively.

"I am well aware that it is undoubtedly an enormous burden and responsibility for one so young, but when you feel it so, remember that you, yourself, courted the position, and must be content to take the consequences with the honors, real or imaginary."

Passing over his bitter jibe, Catherine said:

"You need not doubt in leaving all to my care that all will go well. I am not twenty yet, it is true, but I have much work and much experience for my age, so that every year I have lived since ten years old has counted double. You need suffer no anxiety in trusting me."

He looked at her countenance, at once noble and meek in expression; he remembered the life of toil, self-denial, and devotion she had lived; he even recollected a certain text of Scripture, which said, "By their fruits ye shall know them, do men gather thorns of fig trees?" but the demon of cherished suspicion, whispered, "Twas all done for a purpose, and he hardened his heart, and replied—

"Oh, madam, I have no doubt or hesitation in placing the plantation under your care, and I shall have no anxiety in leaving it so for an indefinite period; not only because I have much faith in your natural talents and acquired experience, but, also, because I have more confidence in your self-love. And knowing that you know our interests in the prosperity of this estate to be identical, I rest assured that you will do for it your very best."

"He—in all other circumstances, and to all other people—so noble, so liberal, so charitable—he never speaks to me but to upbraid me!" was the thought that presented itself to Catherine's mind, out with the loyalty of her nature she repelled it, saying, within herself, "It is because he has what he thinks condemning evidence of my unworthiness—would he but charge me! would he but tell me what it is?"

"Will you give me your attention, Mrs. Clifton?" he asked, breaking in to her sad reverie.

Catherine bowed gently.

And he took down the "form-book" from a shelf, opened it, and laying it before her, entered upon a series of details and explanations on both debt and credit sides of the accounts, with which it is not necessary to trouble the reader. After two or three hours spent in looking over bills, comparing them with receipts, calculating results, etc., he closed the book, replaced the papers in the portfolio, clasped it, and turning around to Catherine, said—

"You understand, now?"

"Yes, perfectly."

"As for these heavy notes that will fall due the first of January, you must contrive an interview with the holders, and get them renewed upon security—as I said before, remember."

"I shall not forget."

"No, or if you do, the holders of the notes will bring them to your recollection in not the pleasantest manner. And now, Mrs. Clifton, I wish you to keep a vigilant eye over Turnbull, and hold him to a strict account. I suspect the man. I never have been able to understand how, with such a heavy force of negroes on this plantation, it has been necessary to hire about a baker's dozen of white laborers, all of them, you understand, his own relations—brothers, sons, and nephews? I have reason to mistrust the fellow, but no time to look after him. Hold him to a strict account, Catherine."

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little lives are lost during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera, infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid.

During the hot weather months Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in every home where there are small children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles. Or if the trouble comes untoward, the prompt use of this medicine will bring the child through safely. Mrs. J. Richard, New Glasgow, Que., says:—"One of my children had a severe attack of diarrhoea which Baby's Own Tablets promptly cured. I know of no medicine so good for stomach and bowel troubles." Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
