LUXURIES IN PRI Through Warders

Through Warders.

The conviction of a warder at Portland, England, for supplying prisoners with tobacco soaked in rum, contrary to the Prison Discipline Acts, has drawn attention to the possibilities which occur of trafficking with warders. It is generally acknowledged that our penal laws are severe. A man, once senteneed, has to undergo his punishment, which includes the deprivation of luxuries to which he has long been accustomed. The "good square meal" is, of course, out of the question. But the bitterest of all is the absence of tobacco and alcohol. The sudden sutting off of these things is often more panishment than the confinement and alence of the prison. Letters and news of the outside world are also ardenly deaired.

All of them are still obtainable in some convict prisons. Warders are paid at a low rate, and are subjected to discipline almost as severe as that of the prisoners themselves. Wealthy relatives of convicts occasionally find warders willing to convey messages and amuggle luxuries to prisoners. They are paid, of course, and generative that he had never gone a day without a "chew," and he added, "the cost to my friends would have provided a whole colony with tobacco for a generation."

Portand, deepite the vigilance of provided a whole colony with tobacco for a generation."

Portland, despite the vigilance of guards, offers the greatest facities for amuging unlawful goods into the prison. It stands on a bleak headland, and the convicts work during the daylight in the open quarries. Civil guards, armed with rifles, stand at definite intervals. But many an onnes of twist tobacco is concealed beneath the stones, and by a sort of Morse code the convicts for whom the inturies are intended learn where to find them. All messes of things have been smuggled into jails. Not long ago a prisoner in a "local" jail showed evident signs of intorication, and inquiry showed that a warder had given him capsules containing spirit, but this case did not come before the courts.—Standard.

Englishwoman Rules Italy.

The hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world, according to the old law, and this idea acems to be carried out in the royal court of Italy, where the governess to the princes and princesses is said to dominate the King.

This lady, who is known as Miss Brown, is all English woman. Whether that is her real name or not does not appear. She has considerable influence with the royal children, and through them influences Queen Helena, of course, influences the King.

That this women is one of the most powerful in Europe came to notice recently when the position of prefect of the royal palace became vacant inrough the death of Count Giantotti and has not been refilled. The reason is found in the nursery, where Miss Brown is said to have informed the Queen that the man to whom the honor would naturally fall was not in favor with the royal children. The deceased prefect used to ramp with them. The question of the appointment of a new prefect is being held in abeyance until a man liked by the children is found, and the important post of prefect remains vacans, greatly to the surprise of the court.

Two Important Books.

A couple of books which are being anticipated with tean interest are the maintenance of the Francis Carnethers Gould, the famous political cartoonist of The Westminster Gazette, and those of Miss Genevieve Ward, probably the oldest actress of to-day. Although she is seventy-five years of age, Miss Ward was acting until a short time ago at His Majesty's Theatre. A countess by marriage, Miss Ward has acted all over the world. She writes as well as she acts, and it is sate to affirm that her reminiscences will be read with a widity on both sides of the Atlantic.

Researding "F. G. G.'a" book the sides of the Atlantic.

Regarding "F. O. G.'s" book, the writer had a note from the carteonist the other day in which he hinted that it would contain much that was entertaining as well as insormative, and those who have heard "F. C. G." lecture know that few men can tell a humorous story better,—London Tit-Bita.

The Duke Got Wet.

The Duke of Norfolt's kindliness towards the aged residents at Arundel is proverbial. A typical example of his good nature occurred when he arrived one day at Arundel Station from London. It was raining heavily, and the duke noticed sheltering beneath the station porch an old woman who was so feeble that she was almost unable to stand. The duke, seeing her plight, took her by the arm, and led her towards the carriage which was awaiting him. He assisted her in, and, closing the door, said to his coachman: Take her to her home. I will walk." His grace sventually reached Arundel Castle soaked to the akin. The Duke Got Wet.

Prolific Families A tombstone found in a Conway, Eng., churchyard bears an inscription that tells an unusual story of large families and the vitable of a forty-first child. The epitaph follows:

"Here lyeth ye body of Nichs Mookes, of Conway, Gent., who was ye 41st child of his father, Wh. Mookes, Esq., by Alice, his wife, and ye father of 27 children, who dyed ye 20th day of March, 1637."

Novel Washing Day. A well-dressed applicant in court at Acton, Eng., who complained of the manner in which her late lodgers had damaged the furniture, said they used to wash clothes in the bathroom and hang them over the chairs of the drawing-room suite to dry.

Apricots In Demand

It is stated that 1,000 tons of apri-cots are used in South Africa jam-making annually.

Have you brouchial catarrh? Have you brouchial catarrh?

It is easily recognised by the dry cough and hoarseness. Not difficult to cure with Catarrhosone as Mr. Kavier Babin of River Capalin, Gue, proved. "No one could suffer from Bronchisis more than I did. I had a hard hacking cough that caused me great pain. My throst was choarse, and I had great distress in my chest. Catarrhosone reached the sore spots and gave immediate relief. Since using it I have not had a single attack. Every physician who is asked about Catarrhosone says it is a sure cure, —so will you if you bry it. Sold everywhere 25c. and $1.00.

are words that mean much to a man when he can take his Insurance Policy in his hand and recognize in it a safeguard and perpetuation for his bu-iness or his home—that business or home in many cases being the result of a life's effort. It is a great thing to know that the future is entirely free from the fear of ruin by the elements of fire and lightning and its attendant evils.

That confidence, the bedrock of happiness and contentment of mind, is generated in the system of every man who is fortunate enough to hold in his possession an ACADIA FIRE POLICY. Gavanagh, Forest Ranger.

Excusing immeet almost at once, Cavanagh left the room, and when he looked in a few moments later he was clothed in the ranger's dusty green uniform, booted and spurred for his long, hard ride. Mrs. Redfield followed him into the hall and out on the doorstone to say: "Bass, you must be careful. This girl is very alluring in herself, but her mother, you know, is impossible."

"Tourse meedlessty alarmed, as usual," he smillingly redied. "She interests me, that's patent. But beyond that, why, nonsense! Good night."

Nevertheless, despite his protestations, he went away up the trail with his mind so filled with Lee Virginia's appealing face and form that he would certainly have ridden over a precipice had it not been for his experienced pony, which had fortunately but one aim, and that was to stoos the range safely and to reach the home pasture at the earliest moment.

Left alone, Lee Virginia thought over her past," She was not entirely without experience as regads respectful courtains. Her life in the east had brought her to know it number of structive lads and a few men, but none of these had become more than a good companion or friend, and, though she wrote to one or two of these youths letters of the utmost friendil.

she wrote to one or two of these youths letters of the utmost friendliness, there was no passion in them, and she felt as yet the sting of nothing more intense in her liking for Cavanagh. But he meant more to her now that she was lonely and beleaguered.

That he had ridden all that long, rough way merely to see her she was not vain enough to believe, but she had nevertheless something of every woman's secret belief in her individual charm. Cavanagh had shown a flat-tering interest in her, and his wish to be her protector filled her with low She heard a good deal more about this particular forest ranger next morning at breakfast. "He is throwinstring at preserrant. The is throwing himself away. Mrs. Redield pasionately declared. "Think of a man waste of genius."

"That's as you look at it, my dear," responded Redfield. "Ross is the guardian of an immense treasure chest which belongs to the nation. Furthermore, he is quite certain, as I am,

THE TOUCH OF IT MADE PURTUES SPENCE that this forest service is the policy of the future and that it offers fine chances for promotion, and then, finally, he likes it."

"That is all well enough for a young man, but Hose is at least thirty-five and should be thinking of settling down. I can't understand his point of view."

"My dear, you have never seen the rocession of the seasons from such a coint of view as that which he enjoys."

"No, and I do not care to. It is quite lonely enough for me right here." Redfield looked at Lee with comic blankness. "Mrs. Redfield is hopelessblankness. "Mrs. Redfield is hopelessly urban. As the wife of a forest supervisor she cares more for pavements and tramears than for the most splendid mountain park."

"I most certainly do," his wife vigorously agreed, "and if I had my way we should be living in London."

"Listen to that! She's ten times more English than Mrs. Enderby."

"The not hert I long for the civilized.

In mist, they long for the music, the lights, the comfort of the city. But when the April sun begins to go down in a smother of crimson and flame and the mountains loom with epic dignity, or when at dawn the air is like some divine flood descending from the unstained mysterious beights, then the dweller in the foothills cries out: "How fortunate we are! Here are health and happiness! Here poverty is unknown!"

health and happiness! Here poverty is unknown!"

Mrs. Redfield was becoming more and more interested in Virginia, who had not merely the malodorous reputation of her mother to contend with, but the memory of a traitorous sire to live down, and when the girl went to her room to pack her bag the wife turned to her husband and said:

"Ross is terribly smitten with her."

Redfield coughed uneasily. "I hope not. Of course he admires her, as any Redfield coughed uneasily. "I hope not. Of course he admires her, as any man must. She's physically attractive, very attractive, and, besides, Ross is as susceptible as a cowpuncher. He was deeply impressed the first time he saw her; I could see that." "I didn't like his going out on the veranda with her last night," confinued Mrs. Redfield, "and when they came in her eyes and color indicated that he'd been saving something exthat he'd been saying something ex-citing to her. Hugh, Ross Cavanagh must not get invol ed with that girl. It's your duty as his superior to warn bit dictatorial on his own part. I'm trifle timid about cutting in on his private affairs."

"Then I'll do it. Marriage with a girl like that is out of the question. Think what his sisters would say?' Redfield smiled a bit satirically. "To the outsider a forest ranger at $900 a year and find himself and horses is not what you may call a brilliant

"Oh, well, the outsider is no judge! Ross Cavanagh is a gentleman, and, besides, he's sure to be promoted. I acknowledge the girl's charms, and I don't understand it. When I think of her objectively as Lize Wetherford's girl I wonder at her being in my house. When I see her I want her to stay with me. I want to hug her." "Perhaps we've been unjust to Lize all along," suggested Redfield. "She has remained faithful to Ed Wetherford's memory all these years-that is conceded. Doesn't that argue some unusual quality? How many women do we know who are capable of such lovelity. Come now! Lite is a rough loyalty? Come, now! Lize is a rough piece of goods, I'll admit, and her unch counter was a public nuisance but she had the courage to send her girl away to be educated, denying her-self the joy of seeing her develop by her side. We mustn't permit our prejudices to run away with us." The girl's return put a stop to the discussion, which could end in nothing but confusion anyway.

CHAPTER IX.

EE VIRGINIA said goodby to Mrs. Redfield with grateful apprecia-tion of her kindness, and espe-cially of her invitation to come again, and the tears in her eyes proagain, and the tears in her eyes pro-foundly affected the older woman, who, with a friendliness which was something more than politeness, in-vited her to come again. "Whenever Roaring Fork gets on your nerves we'll be very glad to rescue you," she said in parting.

Hugh Redfield the girl thoroughly understood and loved, he was so simple hearted and so loyal. On the way to the office he said to Lee, "I will talk to the doctor if you like."
"I wish you would," she responded forvently.

fervently.

She remained in the machine while he went in, and as she sat there a train passed on its downward east-ward run, and a leeling of loneliness, of helplessness, if led her heart. Now that she was within sight of the railway the call of the east, the tempta-tion to escape all her discomforts, was almost great enough to carry her away, but into her mind came the thought of the ranger riding his soli-tary way, and she turned her face to her own duties once more, comforted by the words of praise he had spoken and by the blaze of admiration in his eyes.

Redfield came out, followed by a small man carrying a neat bag.
"You'd better sit behind, doctor," said Redfield. "I shall be very busy "Very well." replied the other, "if Miss Wetherford remains beside me; otherwise I shall rebel."

He began by asking a few questions about her mother's way of life, but as Lee was not very explicit he became impersonal and talked of whatsoever came into his mind-motorcars, irrigation, hunting, flowers, anything at all—and the girl had nothing to do but to utter an occasional phrase to show that she was listening. It was all rather depressing to her, for she could not understand how a man so garulous could be a good physician. She was quite sure her mother would not treat him with the slightest respect.

After all, he talked well. His stream of conversation shortened the way for her. Soon they were rolling quietly up the street to the door of the Weth erford House. They found Lize on duty behind the counter, as usual. Her face was de-jected, her eyes dull, but as the caught sight of the strange little man she cried out, "Wby didn't you bring me a man, Reddy?"

"Hush, mother!" cautioned Lee. "This is the famous eastern physician." "You can't be famous for your beau-ty; you must be brainy," she remarked to herself in the stranger's hearing. Redfield presented of Omaha."
