

when his Partner broke at Bristol? he said, He thought it was, but it did not turn out so.—And being asked, Were not the Effects sufficient to pay all the Newfoundland Creditors? he said, They were.—And being asked, How then had it been a losing Trade? he said, There was enough to pay the Creditors in Newfoundland, but not those in England.—And being asked, Why then did he mean to return to a losing Trade? he said, In Hopes the Fishery may prove better in future.—And being asked, Did he enter into the Trade with any Capital of his own? he said, His Partner had a Capital of Four or Five thousand Pounds, and he had about Three hundred Pounds when he entered with him; his Partner was concerned in some other Trade.—And being asked, Was that other Trade a losing One? he said, He believes not.

