By Wilma Sansom

"Well?"

Sebastion Buttercup awoke with ed to gradually materialize. Her a shiver of excitement. He had big white wings flapped once as had that dream again. He looked she settled onto one arm of the be definitely worth hearing. down at his powder blue nylon pa- chair. Then another figure began jamas with a little giggle of embarto form and to his startled eyes rassment. He really shouldn't be the blond Mrs. O'Hearn drifted dreaming things like that . . . why, slowly to the other arm. The two if mamma knew she would turn apparitions gazed steadily at one over in her grave . . . but then she another, and then, with a sigh, would never think him capable of mamma firmly clutched her halo such . . . well, such indis- and disappeared. The other figure Riding pink waivered for a second, then slipped himself a little shake . . . and what smile in his direction faded into quite a worthwhile experiment and . riding them with a the wallpaper. member of the opposite sex. Sebastion clutched the sugar best. Strange! When mother was alive bowl. "A sign", he cried, a sign! he had never even thought of an- Mamma approves!" other woman, but lately, ever since He could hardly wait to button he had seen that new widow hang- his spats before he called next ing out clothes next door, he hadn't door. His finger shook as he pushbeen able to keep her out of his ed the bell. His throat constricted dreams. She made him do the when the door opened and his most outrageous things! He felt dream, his vision stood looking at quite annoyed with her for a mo- him with a faintly quizzical expresment and pushed her firmly from sion on her round shiny face. his thoughts.

He hurriedly finished dressing "Heh", said Mr. Buttercup. "I, I, and looked at himself in the mir-ror with satisfaction. Didn't look your next door neighbour. Madame, forty-two, he thought complacently, it would-it would", he coughed bestill had quite a bit of hair with a hind his glove, "would give me nice wave in it, and his figure . . . great pleasure if you would care to well, it was rather neat . . . the stomach a bit rounded perhaps but tonight. I realize this is very predefinitely not protruding. He hat-ed protruding stomachs. His fea-lent references . . . if you would tures were certainly all right, small care to enquire . and regular, set off by a small bank manager would . fluffy mustache. Mamma had al- voice trailed off and he blushingly ways said he had the face of a true looked at his feet. gentleman. Mamma! She had been The blond suddenly laughed and so careful of his upbringing, so swung her hair over her face. concerned about his weak chest, so "Gee, I'm sorry", she said. eager to shield him. He remem- got to read to my aunt tonight. bered how pleased she had been always read to her Wednesday when he took the pledge and join- nights. Poor dear's goin' blind." ed the church . . . her expression when he had gotten his job ... airily and shuffled back into the tasting tea in the biggest importing house. . such a gentlefirm in the city . so right for her boy with his delicate senses. Well, he had risen to beautiful she is, he thought, and lamppost. He stood swaying, his only last month Mr. Appleby had presented him with a silver muspresented him with a silver musty years of service.

and getting married . . . goodness knows he was old enough now and dominoes better. Yes, he would (Continued on Page Seven) with mamma gone it was lonely. It ask her for dominoes Saturday. would be nice to have someone to play checkers with again.

The coo coo clock struck eight stare of the fat man. He worked and Sebastion started from his re- steadily all afternoon, concentratverie and walked quickly down- ing as he had never concentrated stairs and into the blue and white before. He had a purpose now. kitchen. While he was having his But at five his steps lagged as he melba toast and warm milk his thoughts again turned toward marriage and from marriage to the decision. He would have his eggwidow next door. What was her name . . . Mrs. O'Hearn . . . Gloria Buttercup . . . Mrs. See Home Companion". He would have a decision. He would have a head to pick up his copy of "Woman's Home Companion". he experi bastion Buttercup . mented for a few minutes, tasting the combination of names on his

Suddenly he made up his mind. | fountain. He would ask her out. He would prepare the way. He thought about it on the way to work and his be?" step was a little more brisk. He thought about it all morning and Sebastion. "And will you please there was something terribly see that the egg is whipped lightjaunty about the way he crooked ly, not beaten, just whipped lighthis little finger around the cup ly handle . . . he felt younger than he had since mamma's death. There and started to make the eggnog. was a purpose in the way he sipped his tea: firmly and briefly with no seems this little jerk comes trottin' nonsense about it.

"You seem awfully cheerful this this mornin' and starts makin' morning", said a fat, red faced man passes at her. Wants her play sitting next to him. "You expect- checkers with him tonight. But ing a raise or something?" that ain't the worst. Guess what

Just then the dinner whistle his name was. Buttercup blew in the docks. Sebastion rose bastion Buttercup. Ain't that a slowly, collected his coat and hat riot?" The clerk guffawed. "Gloria and turned toward the man. "My got a great kick outa it. Called me dear sir", he said, "I am consider- up right away to tell me about it. ing extending a proposal of marriage." He walked out with great conically. dignity, gracefully twirling his been goin' steady ever since her walking stick. Sebastion had dinner by himself old man fell off the bridge. We're in the dining room and gazed goin' to the Pavilian. They got the thoughtfully at the empty chair door prize on tonight. across the table. There was a mist before his eyes. First his moth what's the matter, don't you want er's stoutly corseted figure seem- your eggnog? I didn't beat the egg

A. M. and D.

ANNE SANSOM

The agenda for the next few weeks is just crammed with interesting events. U. R. P. is giving a program on New Brunswick traditional folksongs to be followed on the 31st by it's major production 'Fall of the City" by Archibald MacLeish. This latter promises to

The Taming of the Shrew is also scheduled for the near future. I ing Room, it looks interesting. Personally I am very eager to witness the play, never having seen a bare indeed! Sebastion gave into the chair, and with a brief stage performance before. It is

> The Red 'n Black Revue is still ounding out. Sadly, however, my snooping has been of no avail. I haven't discovered anything about it. However, with Dan MacArthur as Emcee, the show should be well up to the old standards.

Sad as it may seem, the Art Centre is having trouble with its record player. It seems that the wires got crossed somewhere, so now, Messrs. Bach, Brahms, and Beethoven have a terrific humming sound to compete with their music. However, there is always a silver lining-it semes that three energetic engineers are working on the problem and hope to have it solved in time for this week's Pops Concert. May they succeed.

My guardian angel is gently tugging me by hand in hopes that I will say something pleasant for a change. Sadly, though, the muse us some where else at the moment, and so this little article will have to come to an

"Ta, ta". She waved her hand none.

That afternoon he walked into work confidently, ignoring the ways read "Woman's Home Com-

He walked into the store, bought his magazine and sidled up to the

The clerk turned from his con-

"An eggnog, if you please," said

The clerk winked at his friend

"Anyway, as I was tellin' you, it over before she's hardly outa bed

"She goin'?" his friend asked la-

"Don't be a jerk. She and me's versation and asked "What'll it

panion"

Sebastion didn't answer. In fact, he didn't hear him. He was stunned. His eyes filled with tears and so right for her boy with his deli-Sebastion gazed after her for a the top: it was his decision that how kind. So self-sacrificing and thoughts whirling, his world shat-his spirits fell as he thought that had been laughing at him all the tache cup and tea pot for his twen- there would be no cozy twosome time. His idol! She had dared to over the checker board tonight. make fun of his name. Why the It was time he was settling down Oh, well, he would ask her again Buttercups had been United Em-

POX-FOP

A STUDENT FORUM -

There is a line from one of Shakespeare's plays containing the words . . . "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing", plus a further interpolation on idiots. It would almost seem from this that the timeless play-wright had seen a Students' Representation Council in his 16th century.

To the rapidly decreasing number of students who still go to S. R. C. meetings, the night of January 17 must have represented a climax of sorts. In the usual gaseous and blatant atmosphere in which that exalted gathering operated most efficiently (?), business of an incredibly vital nature was being thrashed out. It was the preliminary budget meeting, and rampant confusion in the form of estimates put forward by the various societies were being further entangled through the efforts of Ciceronian foresters and Engineers.

There were young girls there; there were whiskered old men. The most obvious impression that one could have taken away was one of discordant, malicious dissonance; it was as if the gathering had one and all been injected with an activating lieserum, until a sharp ring of the gavel now and then brought a chorus of "I's" out of the Babel.

Over this chaos hung only one certainty: the budget must be cut!

Actually, the cuts were skilfully administered in a number of ways. The first intelligent approach followed a confusion of the cuts (engravings) intended for the Year Book with the cuts for the budget. Someone suggested that individual pictures of the entire student body be put into the Year Book, reasoning that perhaps in that manner we could so sink ourselves in debt that we could declare ourselves bankrupt.

And there were others, equally brilliant: that N. F. C. U. S. be made to pay the Council's passage to Florida, after we had refused to pay annual dues; that Stan Jobb conduct a poll as to whether a legal suit carried against the U. N. B. Library Cartel appears lucrative; etc.

The reader should not get the impression, however, that nothing was accomplished simply because nothing constructive was. The executive was magnificent.

Apparently to confirm their long suspicions that foul play was being done, they called upon the Brunswickan and the Year Book to prepare detailed business reports. Immediately on hearing this the villainous editor, Warner and his skulking henchman Fingers Roy, fell atrembling while the Year Book editor who had already been uncovered by a clever cross-examination looked more desperate than ever.

Warner attempted to forestall his fate by posing obstacles to this stroke of justice. But the inquisitors were too clever for him. They had provided themselves with a fool-proof argument for demanding the statement. With a flourish of oratory worthy of Demosthenes, they cut him down with this irreproachable logic:

"It is our prerogative to demand it!!"

The Council is in many ways reminiscent of Shakespeare. There is the scene with Lady MacBeth, now mad, attempting to wash the red from her fingers . . .

HERBY'S MUSIC STORE

306 Queen Street

FREDERICTON'S BRIGHT AND CHEERY MUSIC CENTRE

"I expected you to run out of gas but not out of Player's!"

PLANS

Wediesday Januar

Stevenson Sa Opportunity Offered .

"The University C sion . . . It was excel religious but just di tions and problems t think about at one

That is how a stud University described eity Christian Missi two weeks ago. Tha description it is ho students will find their Mission from

The University C sion which will be campus in the first ary is the result of ning by a committe students and faculty resenting as nearly factions and groups sity. This represe has in all its deliber mind what it was the age U. N. B. stude in such an underta The students were gestions for topics during the Mission tions received were sidered and the Pr mittee was greatly suggestions in the Mission program.

"How can you a ity to your job?" Christianity and Mind?" "What abo and the politica Those are samples to be discussed a will have an opport during the mission. tunity does not pre often you will adm

This is somethin planned for the st University. I hop dents will justify the organizing con in them and will of the opportuniti Mission presents.

Writers Wor

Rona

(Continued fro descendants of the ed, his momentar

forsaken him. Li pty before him. something drastic stand it. He thoug rejected it as too tail . . . that's wha he would drink a devil with everyon

He straightened and started up th . you had to d something called heard the men a talking about on this street. Louis Ah, that must be

He walked in a down on a stool twitching.

The bartender

kept on polishing Sebastion searc the name of a co seen some adver board once when day School con York. Martini! t he would ha Mrs. O'Hearn cou . his courage fa in a mud puddle.

He slapped the Companion" defi "Whistler's back at him so His face pale whispered "Moth "Well, what's ; bartender indiffe Sebastion look "Tea", he said cup of tea."