

Making the House-Front Attractive

VERANDA decoration is a peculiarly modern institution, and one that seems to be American in its origin. In weather which permits out-of-door life, the family are apt to live a great deal on the veranda—if made comfortable and attractive.

On one porch a corner has been utilized for a rude bench, over which is thrown an Indian blanket. Boxes stained in red for magazines and light literature are placed along the ledge, and with Japanese lanterns, a hammock, comfortable chairs and a tea table, a delightful place is created to pass away a drowsy summer afternoon.

ANOTHER piazza is charming, with its swinging seat and roomy chairs, while awnings of gaily-striped duck add a note of color to the general effect. Fish net forms are an admirable drapery, and spears and shields effective wall decorations.
