FASHION FLAMBEAUX.

White is the reigning color in Paris just at present, but Worth does not like it, and is entering into a crusade against it by threatening all manner of extremes in the way of bright shades.

The Princess of Wales, inclining also to a fancy for violent contrasts, has a new, pink feather muff as an acoompaniment to a costume of sapphire colored velvet, The Princess seems, in a measure, to be taking the place left vacant by poor dethroned Engenie, but etill as regards pink muffs and sapphire dresses it would take something more than royalty to scatter the fashion in the broadenst manner which nsually attended the vagaries of the Erench Emprees.

Hoop ear-rings are becoming fashionable again, so all those who have had trem lying in abeyance for the last few years, can bring out their houps and yet not look ont of date.

The fashion of roller skating has been revived in New York on peco int of the lack of ice. If the kind of weather we had for the last fortnight should become a permanency, we shall have to go and do likewise, though where are we to roll? Probably some ef our funny contemporaries will tell us "in the mud."

The fancy for wearing black kid gloves with fall dress does not seem to diminish among stylish ladies, New Yorkers conspicuonsly. Certainly the fashion has a more economical side than most of such furores.
The latest Parisian novelty is high heels, studded with steel sparks We give the information in good faith. but we leave the " funny man" of the staff to comment upon it, the subject being too light and luminons for our grave official eapacity.
A fashion exchange speaks of perfumed hair as "a new freak," but we fail to see the novelty. Any person, having a large aequaintance with novels, must remember innumerable cases in which the perfumed hair of the heroine was one of the leading charms which placed in thraldom the senses of the hero. and, to say nothing of this, need we go further than the next country town, or the next country meeting house, to see whole rows of perfumed heads on the persons of young gentlemen as well as ladies.
Tea is more fashionable now, as a beverage for receptions, than coffee, inut we doubt whether it is quite so nice. The rule is to place it in the library, or reception room, with cake, and allow the guests to serve themselves at will.
A New York paper thinks that ladies who wear Devonshire hats and plumes to the theatre should be charged the triple price of admission, on account of the manker in which they obstruct all view of the sta $e$, for those sitting behind them. A nother critic says in commenting upon this, " There are none so mad as those who cannot see." And yet another, a local this time. says that when it is his unlucky fate to get behind such a hat, he quotes:
"Oh would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts which arise in me."
Perhaps it is quite ns well for the lady that in this particular instance he is tongue-tied.

A new style of dressing the hair is to separate it in the back in two long braids, which are joined near the nape of the neek by means of a shell ring. Then the two ends of the braids aro taken up, joined again in the middle of the head, and fastened by a shell comb mat hing the ring. This is a very funny way of hair-dressing, and will hardly suit, we fancy, those whose locks are scanty,
The latest Worthian extravagance are opera cloaks made from gold embroidered India shawls, and fastened in the front with heavy golden clasps. Perhaps the great designer borrowed his fancy from Homer
And next she threw around her an ambrosial roke, the work
Of Pallas, all its web embroidered o'er
With forms of rare device. She fastened it Over the brensts with clasps of gold."
As an incentive towards studying the classics, it might be suggested to young ladies that by a patient perusal of the same they would often stumble upon inspirations which would help them to out-Worth Worth or Hammondi.

NO. THREE
THE WIDOW McKILLI GAN SERIES

Presently thero was a soft perfumed sort of rustling and Aggy stood before us, Up sprang Nic in amazement.
" ' protest," he exctaimed; ' I neither saw or heard you, till you stood like a spirit-a beautiful one"-giving her hand an elcgant squeeze at my elbow.
" Ha, las," laughed the widow, gaily, but gently ; "hi hanticipate hi took you by surprise."
She seemed to use ' anticipate' in the future tense.
"You did, indeed." he continued; " and how fair and sweet you do look; better and better every day, Aggy.'
"Flatterer," she murmured softly, blushing
"How can yon, my dear Aggy, hurt my feelings so; 'tis quite true, only I'm like the Queen of Sheba, I don't tell you half.'

Aggy laughed, at which he seemed slightly nettled.
"Why do you langh se," he enquired.
"Langh," she said; "ow ean hi elp hit The hiden of a great strapping six fontter like you resembling the Queen of Sheba. Though to be sure you 'ave got a 'orrid lot of gold habout you."

Why,' said he, "I'm like the Queere of Sheba, because she came to see Solomon, and I came to see you. Yon got something good for dinner. Aggy, my alfactories tell me so "
"Your oil factories",
"Oh I oh !" said he, langhing ; "hold me some one."
"Twould take a cable to 'old yon," she retorted, spitefully; "har you so rude has that." He saw it 'twas time to stop.
"I beg pardon Aggy, here on my bended"trying to get down "knees"-as he floundered on to the floor - three buttens snapping off in the herculean effort; "Aggy forgive or Iswe-swe-"
"What," she cried, in horror; "a minster of

Well, well, I'll never rise-
Good 'eavens," she exclaimed.
"Oh Aggy,"rising, "the smell of that dinner," smacking his lips with a grunt-I suppose must substitute 'sigh' for ears polite-"is mos too much for me;" and he threw himself indolently along the sofa like a great boa constrictor, showing ofl his braun and musele to great medvantage ; also his elegant vest, gold or gold plate watch chain, with its ponderous seal; his white beringed fingers, his perfumed locks, atul round shining red face. I. Peaslope Fowler, whom he had completely ignorerl from the moment of Aggy's entrance, could not help thinking what an excellent hand he would tre in the woods felling trees with an axe
" If 'twere not for the cloth," said he, bringing down his eleplatintine hand on our brawny leg; "if 'twere not for the eloth I should say the smell of that dinner might tempt the d- 1 ,'
" Ho dear," said Aggy; " ho tlear, 'ow you do shock me, han hi must say hi like to see professors not to spreak hof-hof-ministershexistent." meaning consistent

Bravo Aggy " he returned, keeping down a laugh; " I sceond that motion, and that's why I want my dinner

Gourmand," she said, touching a bell beside her; a domestic entered, to whom she gave directions nout the dinner.

Aggy,' said he, "I tried to get past your house this morning, bit the smell of the turtle Was too mt c' for me-knoe'sed me off my horse like a bullet-kuce'sed me into the house like a rine-pin-floored me here like a flounder, There's no place like home," said the Rev, gentleman, looking 'round the cosy apartment with a solemn air of appeciation; the red hot corls flo iting behind the polished arate, the open piano, the flowers, the books, the easy cbair beside the window, containing Aggy's basket of dainty needle work, the snowy damask laid for dinner, the side-board glistning with silver and plate. "Oh dear, what a treasure a home is to a wandering Arab like me: a Nomade-" and springing up he tried to throw one ponderous arm round Aggy's waist. heaven knows what for-but with a little ery she eluded his grasp, but the impetas his thoughts had given that mighty fin could not be easily shut off, and round it swung like an iron gate, sweeping four Rose-Geraniums, and six Christmas Pinks, and two ink bottles and one of Mustang Liniment off the window scattering the contents broad cast over Aggy's dainty ruflling, and knocking the kitten into the fire, whence she emerged spitting and howling like a pack of jackals, her fur stuck full of live-coals, her tail as big as Fox's-brush, standing at an exact perpendicular between heaven and earth, and charged I ead-long into the kitchen,bringing up full tilt against Bridget who was just bringing in a tureen of splendid mock-turtle soup.
"Tare an' ages," slricked Diddy, " phat is it ?"'
"Mew," yelled the frantic kitten, taking her of her pins, and down she came, the empty tureen balancing in the small of her back, looking exactly like a huge mud-turtle floundering in a puddle.
Alas for Nic's dinner; Bounce ran in and licked up the precions condiment in a trice. Moral.-There's many a slip between the cup and the lip.

Glow Worm.

The Norristown Herald has an artiele on the Lord-Hick marriage which has caused so much excitement in New York. The article is hraded "Why did she marry him"? The only answer we can think of is-The Lord only knows why. Or perhaps it was so that she conld "lord it over him."

Cleopatra's Needle has arrived at its destination at last. It's perhaps needless to say the world breathes more freely.
