a million and a half a year, and it has been going up ever since. While Canada has suffered from but one serious war in the last hundred years she has twice been invaded, the second occasion being in 1866. The Fenian Raid of that year was not the result of any grievance against Canada; it was intended as a stroke against Britain through a British possession. Still the raid was repelled by Canadian forces and the British government refused to assent to Sir John Macdonald's request and to demand from the United States compensation for the losses inflicted on this country.

Still, despite all this, Canada would not stand idly by if Britain were in serious danger. But better assurance of the existence of irremovable danger is required than has yet been vouchsafed. Premier Asquith reminded us the other day that ten or fifteen years ago there was as much talk of war with France as there is now with Germany. The situation then existing was aggravated by the fact that France was the traditional enemy. Still by frank straightforward dealing differences were adjusted and France and Britain are now united in sincere friendship. What was possible in the case of the traditional enemy, with which there had been a hundred wars, should not be impossible in the case of the traditional friend with which there has not been one war.—Toronto Sun.
