Coming Home.

"A large number of Canadians who settled in Dakota and other parts of the United States, are daily returning to Canada convinced that they can do better at home than abroad."—Ex.

From bleak Dakota's blizzards, From Kansas' arid plain; From retrogade New England, They're coming home again Home to that fair Dominion Where plenty smiles on toil,
Where to labor's honest effort
Responds the fertile soil;
Where Nature's gracious bounty
Extends o'er land and main—
To their own fair country, Canada, They're coming home again

Misled by fair pretenses
They strayed away from home,
Imbued with futile fancies,
In foreign lands to roam;
Fair fortune seemed to call them
To some more favored shore,
And they left their own dominion And they left their own domined To return to it no more. In fancy's dream they pictured A country rich with gain, But the picture proved illusive And they're coming home again.

And they re coming home again.

Far sadder, wiser, poorer,
By experience dearly taught,
Their fancy's visions faded,
Their day dreams come to naught.
They turn their backs on labor
Which would not repay their pain,
And with hope once more re-kindl
They're coming home again.
To the land of their affection,
From it no more to ream. To the land of their allection,
From it no more to roam,
To their own fair country, Canada,
Once more they're coming home.

Kate, three or four years younger than she, seemed too much to let go by without some effort to earn it.

I did a lot of hard thinking for a few days and spent all my spare time over some old books in a musty, out of the way library down town I finally told Frank that I would see what could be done if he would give $500, the rest if I succeeded in the undertaking. He agreed at once, so I put a carefully worded 'Want' in the Herald, offering $200 for a bit of scalp from the head of a healthy person, a young woman preferred, and naming an hour for applicants to call at my office.

Mildred had to take the lead. Kate, three or four years younger than she, three or four years younger than she, three or four years younger than the lead. Her dress was neat and plain, and fitted exquisitely. Her gloves and boots were not new, but they were the gloves and boots of a lady. Wavy, dark brown hair was worn in a heavy coil beneath a little round hat, and I thought, "Here's the very girl at last."

I questioned her closely and extra constraints and in the last of the strict of the str I questioned her closely and explained to her more fully than to the others just what I wanted. Frank was a cheery, happy young fellow of 20, and took his mishap with uncommonly good grace. I read to him from my small store of books and papers, and we had long and interesting talks. Frank was full of enthusiasm of youth, and I, eight or made by anyone to discover my identity.

of my mother's illness I lost my position in a fair sum, which enabled Mildred to take better care of herself and send more money to her mother. The part suited her, and everywhere she was thing looked bright and promising, when a telegram called her to her mother's side. It was so worded that she was not much alarmed. teresting talks. Frank was full of enthusiasm of youth, and I, eight or ten wears his senior, was, my steady colleagues would have said, a vision ary romantic boy. Those few days made us better acquainted than we would have become in months of intercourse in the city. When Frank was able to rejoin his friends my time was up and I returned to town, regretting the necessity that compelled me to hat with the pleasant young fellow. He did not forget his promise to look me up when he returned to the city, and from that time on we were the best of friends. I had, I am sure, more of his confidence than did any of one else, and I talked to him—in a way that my medical brethere would have pronounced wild and unprofessional, but, he took it in sober carnest, no matter how—wild, believing in my theories just because I aired them.

My friend was a good looking young fellow, well made as to figure, easy and graceful—He had blue grey eyes, a well shaped brow and rounded chin, dark hair which, however, was quite thin, giving promise of early baldness, a nose perhaps a trifle too long and an upper lip a trifle too long and lip and the a success.

The young couple were as brave as possible. There was not even a groan from either. The girl lay face down luon a layers had much of a home, and feel awfully happy over the prospect of baying such a nice wether and feel having such as feel having such as Frank well knew what an improvement a mustache would be—be did not banker after whiskers, a mustache was all he wanted—for he had, worn false upon several occasions when taking part in private theatricals. He was quite clever and played very well for an amateur, but often accepeda part, I verily believe, more for the opportuoity it gave him to wear a mustache than for any other reason.

He was very well situated financially. His parents were dead. His father had left him a good business, which, however, had so far demanded little of his attention, as his father had also left him a partner, a shrewd, steady bachelor, without near kin, who was devoted to the young man. Considerable properry outside of the business added a good deal to his income. Like myself he had few reatives, but then he had hosts of friends, and was a great favourite in society.

There was not even a groan from either. The girl lay face down upon a lounge her luxuriant, wavy hair streaming around her. I could not but admire the dainty shape of her head and the pretty neck, with tiny rings of hair curling down upon it. Just below one shell-like ear a small star shaped spot showed white upon the now rosy, skim. It would probably not be noticeable usually. The young lady came to my office for some days until the wounds were quite healed. As she was young and healthy it did not take long, but I never got a glimpse of her face nor did I try to do so, having too much respect for the courageous young hadis the healthy it did not take long, but I never got a glimpse of her face nor did I try to do so, having too much respect for the courageous young hadis at the probably of the healthy it did not take long, but I never got a glimpse of her face nor did I try to do so, having too much respect for the courageous young hadis and the probably had a probably had a probably not be noticeable usually probably in the now respect of the courageous young h upper school room is a smaller room, still called the library, although no longer stored with books. Here, in exne tases, flogging is administered by the head master; none of the assistants being empowered to inflict corporal punishmentr The victim, kneeling on a wooden step called the "block," is held down by two junior collegers, and a senior colleger hands the head master the necessary birch or birches. A former block was destroyed during a re bellion in 1783, and fragments of it were distributed as trophies among the boys concerned. Its successor was cleverly carried away by the late Lord Waterford and two other old Etonian in 1836, and it is now preserved at Curreghmore as an historical relic Flogging was for many years the normal mishment for almost all offences. great and small, for serious breeches of liscipline, and for mistakes in Latir construing. Many amusing storiessome of them true, more of then apocryphal-are told of Dr. Keats, and the vigorous manner in which he yielded the birch, and it is remembered that he suppressed an attempt at rebellion by uccessively flogging more than eighty boys in the middle of a summer night in 1832. Since his time there has been a gradual decrease in the number of floggings administered by subsequent head masters, and Dr. Warren seldon reports this form of punishment .-English Illustrated Magazine.
