"What has the League of Nations done? It has prevented war in five cases. It has built up a great sanitary organization. It has built up a great secretarial organization. It has brought into being the International Court of Justice to which twenty nations have acknowledged jurisdiction."

"In some quarters," the speaker maintained, "there has been a lot of discussion as to the enormous cost of keeping up the League of Nations, and it has been said that the results obtained have not been worth the money expended. The absurdity of this statement will be seen when I tell you that the cost of the League for one year is about equal to the maintenance of one modern battleship for the same period."

World Conditions.
Referring to world conditions, Sir Robert declared the aspect at present was anything but propitious. He remembered the night before he left the Peace Conference, counting up with Smith and Bohns, 18 or 19 different fronts in Europe and Asia, on which fighting was in progress and the Peace Conference had been in session for more than three months. Since then conditions had not improved to any considerable extent. "I have thought if that Peace Conference had been a little shorter and Germany allowed to be heard on the question of reparations, perhaps world conditions might be easier today."

"If the arrangement which the United States and Great Britain made as a guarantee to France during a certain number of years, had been carried out, perhaps the difficulties facing us today would not be so momentous. But it was never ratified and consequently the treaty which Great Britain made, to the same effect, never became effective, and therefore, France today is without a guarantee of which she believed herself to be possessed when we left."

Feeling of Depression.
"We left that conference, and all that turmoil, in the spring of 1919, with a certain feeling of depression about conditions in Europe and that feeling of despair has never entirely left me, although I have always been hopeful and still am, because the world has a habit of lifting itself out of chaos."

"The danger to our own civilization—the time has long since passed when any nation itself can live in a hermitage—lies in the fact that in any world affair, every nation is affected. The world is really one vast commonwealth under modern conditions, and I don't believe it would be possible to have another war without practically the whole world being involved."

"I don't know whether you have ever tried to realize what another war would mean. No one can tell what would happen. In modern warfare every nation engaged is a belligerent and therefore it is the duty of everyone to do his part to make for the future peace of the world by every means in his power."

"I was at the Washington Conference which succeeded by its employment of methods that are embodied in the League of Nations. It is the fashion in some parts of Canada—and I believe here—to sneer at the League of Nations. But if you are not going to have its influence on the world, what are you going to have? Are you going to go back to the days of diplomacy—often of the secret nature—that brought about the world war of 1914-1918. I venture to say that if the League of Nations, from its inception, has never done anything of a concrete character, it would have been well worth while to establish it merely as a means of bringing the nations of the world into closer communication and meeting in the case of emergency."—Montreal Star, Nov. 26.

Defends Idea of Nation's League.

SIR R. BORDEN CONSIDERS IT EFFECTIVE INSTRUMENT TO PREVENT WAR.

World affairs to-day, and especially European affairs, may easily drag civilization down to ruin and chaos, stated Sir Robert Borden, former Prime Minister of Canada, when he addressed the Young Men's Canadian Club at the Windsor Hotel, Saturday afternoon.

The remedy for this state of affairs, and the one that is nearest at hand, the speaker asserted, was the League of Nations.

"Though the League of Nations so far has accomplished little that is concrete," said Sir Robert, "its mere existence has been a constant reminder to countries faced with war, that their differences may be settled without always resorting to the sword."

Prevented War.

"I believe that the League of Nations, in the three and one-half years of its troubled existence, has done more to assure the peace of the world and prevent war and to teach the nations the hope of conference than all the chancelleries of the world."

"Therefore, I bespeak from you the support of that covenant. How are you to assure the peace of the world? By force? No. The only way is to educate the nations of the world, to settle their disputes by peaceful means. And the fact that they are called together yearly at Geneva is a great means of teaching them that habit."
