Speculating further, the writer says he is convinced that the Japanese when they reach Mukden, will be comelled to rest, after the terrible severity of the fortnight's operations. They will also need to get the railway in vorking order, and, if it is true that Gen. Linievitch is advancing, Gen Kuroki may be obliged to base himself on the same communications as Gens. Oku and Nodzu. This, ever when the railway is working, will be considerable strain, though the sitution has been improved by the occupation of Yingkow and the use of the Liao River as far as Old New Chwang which is now an advanced base. The correspondent, while traveling to Pekin, saw numbers of Japanese junks arrying stores to Old New Chwang.

Experience has taught us how to buy well-we are buying all the time—a big store like this has to. It's a matter of great concern to us to Two HAPPY THOUGHT RANGES buy only meritorious goods, and the people we buy from know it. They wouldn't attempt to sell us anything else. To try to might mean the loss of our custom, and that's too big an item to loose. We never brag about being the cheapest store in town -we're content to have you believe our goods are nicer, our conditions fairer, our service better, our stocks cleaner, our styles newer. We cannot always truthfully say that our prices are away lower than others. How do we know? We might hazard the assertion, but we prefer not to. When you want anything particularly nice at the lowest possible price come here. Your money returned if not satisfied. That's the test.
