THE TOWER OF BAREL. Everybody is familiar with the story of Babel, and without inquiring too closely into its accuracy we must all admit that the diversity of languages calls for some explanation. This diversity is, indeed, not so great as appears upon the surface, for close investigation shows that the difference between the languages spoken by the Caucasian race is not nearly so radical as was formerly supposed. The similarity does not end here, for in almost every tongue spoken by mankind words occur which seem to have been derived from the same original. These may be the result of intercourse. We need not go iar from home to find illustrations of bow the introduction of artibrings with it new words. Perhaps no cited than by the word "Siwash."
