The private office of Attorney General Mowat was crowded at 3 p.m. yesterday with aldermen, property owners and

James Austin, president of the Dominion bank, John Macdonald, Geo. Badgerow, M. P. P., and several well-known wnolesale merchants residing in the northern suburbs. Ald. Moore, who may be styled father of the scheme, made the strongest appeal in favor of extension of the city boundaries. His coalijuter, Ald. Turner, was absent.

Mayor Boswell, the first to address the premier, stated that for his own part he was not particularly in favor of extension, but was willing to bow to the decision of the majority. There were technical objections to be got over, but if these were overruled there appeared to be no reason why the vote of the council should not be carried out.

The small boy of Scotch birth or parent-age will probably celebrate the evening by a more than usually large distance. Middle aged Scotchmen who are starners who happen to be at a safe distance. Middle aged Scotchmen who are disposed to conviviality will not feel bound to limit their inclinations on such a night. In the suburbs and in surrounding districts where the sway of the cop is less felt, the pranks peculiar to the anniversary will have still freer latitude. Fences will be broken down, doors demolished and carried away and bells rung with the orthodox amount of judicious indiscrimination.
