

A PARIS ADVENTURE.

"Sixty years ago I visited Paris, and was one evening seated in my apartment in the Hotel de France, when a boy came in from the porter. The boy said there was a Mr. Bunnell, an Englishman, dying at a house in the Rue St. Vitore and wished to see me.

"How could I refuse to go? I then went to a country man in a strange land, and he struck down and he needed a friend. I of course I must go. I looked at the boy and was sure he was honest. I told him I would go. Yet I would not venture out in such a city unarméd, and I went to my dressing case and took my revolver. I was one of the few who had had six barrels. I knew they were all carefully charged, for I had examined them only a few hours before.

"When all was ready I turned down the passage and he led the way. "Finally we entered a narrow, dark street through which few people were moving; and when my guide stopped it was before an old building, the door of which was low and the street, and in one corner of the structure.

"They'll expect me, so I won't ring," he said, as he pushed the door open. "We entered a long, vaulted hall, the only light to which came from a small lamp which stood within a niche by the stairs. This lamp the boy took and then said if I would follow him he would lead me at once to Mr. Bunnell's room.

"I confess I began to have some misgivings; but I would not turn back now, so down the stairs I went, and at the foot I found a long passage, which we followed for some dozen yards, when my guide stopped before a door which he opened, I passed in after him, and saw him place the lamp upon a table.

"Mr. Bunnell is there," he said, pointing to a door at the end of the passage. "You can go and see him while I go and call my master." "So I took the lamp and went to the door which had been pointed out.

"The place was not over eight feet square, and upon the floor lay a form of wood, with the face, pale and ghastly, turned toward me. The rays of my lamp fell strongly upon the marble-like features, and I really saw that the eyes had started from their sockets and that the tongue protruded from between the white lips.

"For some moments I was an horrified spectacle; but my sense seemed almost forsaken me, and when I did think, my first movement was to see if the girl was really dead. I stooped over her form and touched it and found it stiff and cold.

"She could not have been over seventeen, and had a face and form of considerable beauty. Her dress was rather poor, and her hair fastened up in a bun. Around her neck was a dark, livid circle, where she had been strangled. There was nothing else to be seen, and I could see where no door, save the one by which I had entered, and no window.

"I hurried out from the place, through the other two doors, and the floor by which I had entered from the passage. I placed my hand upon the latch, but it would not give. I tried again and again, but with no better success. The door was not only locked, but so closely and securely that I very soon gave up my mind that I could not force it. It was made of solid oak plank and was immovable.

development will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, rickets, fever-sore, hip joint disease or other grave conditions and suffering are sure to result from lack of proper attention to such cases.

CANTONING EXPERIENCES.

Incidents of an Election Campaign in New York. From the National Register. At one cottage I found the man at home, and he said roughly, "No Liberal has been sending me, but are you offended with me for calling in on you about your vote?" "No," he said, "but Mr. A. (the Conservative candidate) would give me the cheap loaf."

"For are mistaken, for he must follow the leaders of his party in this matter, and they are pledged not to do anything to raise the price of bread." "Well, I heard him speak in a bar, and I stood outside, and he said some odd things. "Perhaps, as you were outside, you misheard me, and I never said such a thing." "That I am sure he never said, as you have voted and he is asking you for it. Do you think he would be such an idiot as to say such a thing?" However, he presented itself to believe in and vote for the Liberal.
