RESULT OF LITTLE KINDNESSES.

A youth once went to a large city to work. He had no friends, no money, and was both awkward and bashful, while his wages barely supported him.

He could not spend a cent for pleasures, but he had been brought up to love his church, and every Sunday found him in his place, though for a time he was too shy to join the young people socially.

Just behind him sat an elderly couple whom he knew by reputation, for the gentleman was an honored statesman and general. One Sunday the general's wife whispered to her husband as they rose to leave the church: "Invite that young man home to dinner, dear!"

Like most great men and all good soldiers, he knew how to obey promptly, so he approached the friendless young man and courteously gave the invitation.

Though almost overwhelmed at the honor, the latter at once accepted, and when his shyness wore off, showed his entertainers that he could talk well and intelligently. To be brief—and this incident is true—the general engaged the youth as his private secretary, and he became an inmate of the grand house, where he was treated almost like a son.

Months later he ventured to ask the lady why he was invited to dinner, and she answered: "Because you were insyour place every Sunday, and showed reverence to God. I grew to observe you closely, and soon decided you were alone and poor, but a neat, self-respecting and intelligent boy. I longed to give you a taste of home, and perhaps a little motherly help, and I am sure we will neither of us regret that you awakened the impulse and I indulged it!"

Men can expect no more from society than they give to it. He who gives a scorpion in place of an egg will get the scorpion in return. Adonibesek cut off the thumbs and great toes of threescore and ten kings who gathered their meat under his table, but when subsequently he fled in battle and was caught, he shared a like fate. He recognized the justice of the procedure, and said, "As I have done, so God hath requited me." On the other hand, he who shows mercy and kindness receives mercy and kindness. The law of recompense obtains in every sphere and relation in life. Jesus defined it with exactitude and fidelity when he said: "With what measure ye metc, it shall be measured to you again."
