CURED.

No Twisting, No Knife,

And no tearing of the muous membrane of the nose. This polypus was as large as a large fig, and had grown so as to force the bones of the nose and roof of the month out of shape, producing decided deformity of the face. We killed this polypus root and branch, and when dead we then removed it from the nose. we then removed it from the nose. The name of the young man is Geo. Waite, of 123 McJual Street, Toronto. The cause of this polypus was catarrh. Catarrh causes polypus in nearly every instance. Polypoid growths close up the nostrils, one or both, causes foul secretions, after the voice and cause frequent bleedings of the nose. A good average regular frequently manages to let people bleed to death from polypus, not knowing what is the matter.
