ever recorded in history . Our forces in the Crimea ever recorded in history. Juriforces in the Crimea do not amount to more than, 55,000 (combatants, driviled as follows:—17,000 French engaged in the siege, 15,000 forming an army of tobservation, 9,000 English engaged in the siege, and 6,000 in observation, Torks, 6,000, with artillery, cavalry, and engineers, from 10,000 to 12,000. These figures are according to We, however, received weinforces and a constant with the companion of the companio curate. We, however, receive reinforcements every curate day. The Russian army is composed of a garrison of 20,000, and of a corps of 35,000 to 40,000, now in front of our army, of observation. The advanced posts are within cannon shot. I must add that our army of observation is in a perfectly strong defensive position, and that it will not quit it to assume the offensive.—
In my opinion, from the strength of its lines, it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of sour times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is folly equal to an army of four times its strength. As it is shad to the strength of the strength of the liusians. This is beginning to be tiresome. The ties, and we have no yet extinguished the income. The moons are birning with impatience, and would put an end in it by making the assault."

This is highly descriptive of our brave allies:—

"General Conrobert has issued an order of the day, which has excited great enthusiasm. You cannot figure to yourself the ardor of the troops. They are not only full of fiery enthusiasm, but are mad-nobly mad. An immense, cry of joy greeted the order of he day. The soldiers threw their caps in the air, shook each other by the hand, and embraced each other. The spectacle was one which I shall never forget as long as I live. The General-in-Chief invited all the men who desired to form part of the columns of assault to inscribe their names. There was a great rush, each man wishing to arrive first, and in a short time 8,000 names were inscribed. That was too many; General Canrobert only wanted 4,000.—How can I describe to you the griet of those who had to be struck out of the lucky list? I wish to exaggetate nothing; but many of these iron soldiers had tears in their eyes. 'Cre nom, captain!' said one of my company; 'I have been wounded five times in Africa, and again at the Alma, and am set down for a decoration, and yet I am not to go. Cre nom, I have no luck. Recommend me, I pray you, to the General. I had great difficulty in calming the man, by telling him that we should have our part to play on the great day. A deputation of those 'who have no luck' has solicited from the General-in-Chief the honor of following the first column. They state that they have received a positive promise that they shall do so. The men are now engaged in sharpening their bayonets, cleaning their muskets, and carefully examining their gunlocks. Some, however, find time to think of their country and their families, and the savans of the company have been placed in requisition by those who cannot write. The eleven batteries that commenced firing on the morning of November 1st, were all cut in the rock by means of petards, which will give you an idea of the obstacles we have to surmount. A new battery of 15 guns, on our extreme right, worked by sailors, is doing wonders, and has silenced the Mat Bastion. On the left we are not so successful. Shortly after nightfall, with the moon at its full, the third parallel was opened at about 180 yards from the Mat Bastion. This line of approach is seldom opened until the fire of the place is completely subdued. Generally it is under cover that this important trench, from which the columns march to the assault, is dug. Here we have been more enterprising. It was under the fire of a formidable artillery, and without any protection, that our engineers undertook and executed one of the most critical of siege operations. But the siege of Sebastopol is different from all those hitherto recorded, and the attack and defence are not conducted according to the ordidinary rules of war. No fortress ever reckoned so great a number of guns or so numerous a personnel of artillerymen, and the besiegers are 800 leagues distant from their arsenals. The Russian artillery is not only one of the first in Europe, but there never was, perhaps, a siege commenced with equal numbers against a town so formidably aimed."

What unquenchable pluck those Frenchmen have

-game to the backbone. Our purser, Bowley, when ashore next day, met a party carrying off a French officer badily wounded—one arm shot close off, and other wounds besides. He asked the poor fellow to drink a little brandy and water, and he immediately pulled out a flask of his own—drank to Bowley—sung out "Long life to the Emperor and the English," and then fell back, exhausted. Their pluck never dies away.—Letter of an Officer in the Yorkshireman.
