

should be to some affair at which only men are to be present.

A man should show as much courtesy to a woman in his employ as he does to the women he meets in social life.

It is not in good taste to visit at the home of one's betrothed, unless a personal invitation is received from his mother.

Two women may attend, with perfect propriety, a place of amusement without an escort. They should be under such circumstances exceptionally quiet in their manners and their dress.

When a man who is to escort a girl to an entertainment calls for her at her own home, it is proper for her to appear with her wraps on, ready to start at once.

In escorting a young woman home, a man should go up the steps with her, wait until the door is opened, and, as she enters the house, raise his hat and say good-night.

If a young girl were very "there would be no impropriety in her mother bringing her betrothed to see her, although, of course, the mother would remain in the room during his visit.

It is always proper and courteous for a person in church to share either prayer-book or hymnal with any one who may be without either.

If one approves of the acting or the sentiment of the play, there is no impropriety in expressing gentle applause, but a loud clapping of the hands is decidedly vulgar.

One should never prevent people from leaving his house when they desire. That is not hospitality. It is tyranny; it is taking a mean advantage of their unwillingness to offend.

If a woman lives in a boarding house and has only one room, it would be very bad taste to re-
