

The Man With Corns.

He suffers horrible torments, but who is sorry for him? Nobody. We laugh and joke to see him limp and hear him use hard words. We say, "Oh, it's nothing but sore corns and they won't kill him." No, but they spoil his pleasure just the same. He might be happier with consumption or a fever. Whatsoever hurts us is something to be got rid of if possible; and Mother Seigel's remedies are popular, because—though they don't cure corns—they cure so many ills that are worse.

Purely Personal.

"I have lost my little Fido," said the young woman, chokingly. "Here is a notice offering a reward for his recovery."

"To go in the 'want' column, I suppose," said the advertising clerk.

"No, sir," she replied, haughtily. "I want it to go among your other personal items, sir!"

Poor Poison.

"Why, what's the matter?" "Well, sorr, I swallowed a pertater bug, and sorr, though I took some Parrus-green widin five minutes after tor kill the baste, shill he's just raisin' th' divil inside o'me."

Cover It Up.

Heat in some form is the great cure for pain. All the same we don't want to be burned. The true medium is struck by Mother Seigel's Soothing Plasters. They warm, calm and quiet, the spot where the pain is. They cover it up, and the pain goes to sleep like a crying baby, after its mother has fed it and tucked it in the crib. So when you've got an ache or a pain where you can get at it, put on one of these soft, porous blankets, and in a few hours you will have forgotten what you put it there for.

Nothing Strange.

Mrs. Mann—It is strange that you cannot hold the baby a few minutes, when you used to be able to hold me on your lap for hours.

Mr. Mann—The young one is so restless. He squirms and kicks all the time. You didn't kick the east little bit.

Saved by a Little Child.

"How is it that Jenkin's baby cured him of drinking?" "Because every time he went home tipsy he thought he saw twins."
