A VETERAN OVER THE LINE.

Sergeant John Harrington, late of the 28th Regiment, Passed Away Tuesday Night. In the Home for Invalids, Sergeant John Harrington died on Tuesday night. He at one time belonged to the 28th Regiment, known as the "Old Brags," and had served with his regiment in the Crimean War, being present at the battle of Inkerman. After retiring from active service he was appointed assistant warden of the military prison at Cork and a few years later of the military prison at Aldershot. He had a pension of 2 shillings a day. Besides a widow he leaves five children. He was 77 years of age. The funeral, which will take place tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. from his late residence, 53 Dundas-street, will be under the direction of Her Majesty's Imperial Army and Navy Veterans, of which organization he was a member. At St. Barnabas' Church services will be conducted by Rev. W. H. Clarke.

A Treat in Store. Alexandre Petcheloff, known to Toronto as only by his great fame, will make his first appearance here at the Male Chorus Club concert, Feb. 15. This Russian violinist, 26 years of age, has already received every honor that Germany can bestow on musical genius, and achieved a European fame second to none in the annals of musical history. The announcement of his Toronto engagement has been hailed with enthusiasm by all our musical and social world, much praise being accorded the Male Chorus Club for its success in securing so renowned a celebrity. Subscription lists for the concert are in the hands of club members, and everywhere there is the greatest enthusiasm in regard to this eagerly anticipated treat.

What Killed Farmer Greenway? It is a story that has been told in every corner of the province. A man who had been defeated in Manitoba. He has always looked upon him as a fair specimen of a farmer-bred honesty and good sense, and he believed that he meant to do his duty to the people. He owes his fall probably, in part at least, to the devotion of his principles by his party at Ottawa, and their subservience to railway domination. Apostasy is a weak as well as an infamous game. It wins over no enemies, while it estranges many friends.

WANTED, A MODERN BLACKSTONE.

It is time the legal profession made a new departure in the drawing of agreements. We have before us to-day two notable examples of the imperfection of the art of agreement-making. These are the Railway agreement and the act of 1887, under which the rights of the Consumers' Gas Company and of gas consumers are respectively defined. The great defect in agreement-making as practiced by lawyers is that they continue to recognize the courts as the arbiters of all disputes between the parties. The courts of the land fulfil many useful functions, but at the same time they are often of no more practical use than so much old lumber. They are unwieldy, cumbersome, slow, costly and often useless. It took three years to get a judgment in the city's case against the Consumers' Gas Company, and then it was no judgment at all, but simply an announcement that the proper party had entered the action. It will probably take three years more to get another judgment, and just as likely as not, it too, will be founded on a technicality. Those who make agreements should refuse to recognize the courts at all. The court should be made a factor in a business deal only in the last resort. Arbitrators, with final authority, should be used to interpret agreements instead of judges. The courts should be used merely for carrying out the decrees of the arbitrators. The trouble with the Street Railway agreement is that the arbitrator appointed to arrange the timetable and the seating capacity of the cars has neither final jurisdiction nor any means of carrying his decision into effect. No matter what time-table Mr. East may order the company to observe, the latter may and will refuse to recognize it, and thereby bring the matter into court. It is as clear as noonday that the agreement contemplated vesting in the Board and Council the framing of the schedule on which the cars were to be run. Why, then, didn't the agreement specify some simple method of enforcing this provision? This could have been done by making the decision of the Engineer and Council final, and by giving this decision all the authority of a decree of a court of last resort. To the lawyer who has come to regard jurisprudence as a science, with certain fixed and immutable laws, this method may appear arbitrary and illogical to the general principle upon which jurisprudence is founded. Our answer to this is that we object to the foundation upon which the science rests. By giving the company the right to appeal to the courts, it is enabled to violate the express terms of its contract for months and years. The hardship which 200,000 citizens are subjected to by reason of the violation of the agreement is ten times more serious than the possibility of the Engineer and Council doing an injustice or failing on the company doing "impossibilities."

Will Go to Winnipeg.

Rev. R. P. Bowles, pastor of the Metropolitan Church, Winnipeg. The call takes effect in June, 1901.

Mrs. Alfred Clarke, of Hiteman, Manor, Iowa, has been the mother of four children. Now she says:

"I am about to become a mother again, and I am very anxious to get rid of my present troubles."

"I could not eat any breakfast, and I was very nervous."

"I began taking 'Favorite Prescription' twice a day, a teaspoonful at a time, and I am pleased to say that I have not had a vomiting spell for two mornings."

"The 'Favorite Prescription' relieves morning sickness and the other discomforts of the period preceding motherhood by purifying the blood, and by strengthening and invigorating the special organs involved."

Morning sickness is due to the efforts of nature to remove from the body every bit of impurity which might affect the health of the little one to come. The direct cause of the nausea is an irritation of the nerves of the stomach. The 'Favorite Prescription' goes directly to the source of the trouble, soothes the irritated nerves and brings comfort and relief. It is a safe medicine to take. It contains no alcohol, opium or other dangerous drug. It contains no sugar or syrup. It aids the digestion and is a general system tonic, while it acts directly and strongly on the one special set of organs."

By giving the company the right to appeal to the courts, it is enabled to violate the express terms of its contract for months and years. The hardship which 200,000 citizens are subjected to by reason of the violation of the agreement is ten times more serious than the possibility of the Engineer and Council doing an injustice or failing on the company doing "impossibilities."

It is time the legal profession made a new departure in the drawing of agreements. We have before us to-day two notable examples of the imperfection of the art of agreement-making. These are the Railway agreement and the act of 1887, under which the rights of the Consumers' Gas Company and of gas consumers are respectively defined. The great defect in agreement-making as practiced by lawyers is that they continue to recognize the courts as the arbiters of all disputes between the parties. The courts of the land fulfil many useful functions, but at the same time they are often of no more practical use than so much old lumber. They are unwieldy, cumbersome, slow, costly and often useless. It took three years to get a judgment in the city's case against the Consumers' Gas Company, and then it was no judgment at all, but simply an announcement that the proper party had entered the action. It will probably take three years more to get another judgment, and just as likely as not, it too, will be founded on a technicality. Those who make agreements should refuse to recognize the courts at all. The court should be made a factor in a business deal only in the last resort. Arbitrators, with final authority, should be used to interpret agreements instead of judges. The courts should be used merely for carrying out the decrees of the arbitrators. The trouble with the Street Railway agreement is that the arbitrator appointed to arrange the timetable and the seating capacity of the cars has neither final jurisdiction nor any means of carrying his decision into effect. No matter what time-table Mr. East may order the company to observe, the latter may and will refuse to recognize it, and thereby bring the matter into court. It is as clear as noonday that the agreement contemplated vesting in the Board and Council the framing of the schedule on which the cars were to be run. Why, then, didn't the agreement specify some simple method of enforcing this provision? This could have been done by
