LIQUOR RAIDS MADE AT MINTO

Fines in Three Cases, Two Others to be Tried—Stock Destroyed.

(Special to Times)

Fredericton, N. B., July 14—A clean-up in connection with the liquor situation at Minto was made on Thursday by Inspector Fraser Saunders, who secured four convictions against three men and destroyed a quantity of home made beer. In addition to that two defendants who pleaded not guilty will have a hearing at Gagetown on Tuesday.

The convictions were as follows: John Morrell for selling liquor, $100 and costs; Fred Martin for selling Jamaica ginger without permit, also selling liquor, $150 and costs; William Fulton for selling liquor, $100 and costs. These cases were heard before Magistrate McLeod.

Inspector Saunders destroyed a large tub of home made beer, a dozen bottles of over strength beer, and five three-gallon jugs of similar liquid.

PLEA FOR GOAT IS UNAVAILING

Now Higher Court Must Say if "Billy" and "Nanny" are Cattle or No.

Winnipeg, July 14.—The question of whether goats come under the heading of cattle is a point which has caused considerable local interest, and the Manitoba court of appeals may be called upon to give a ruling.

A. McIntosh was fined $15 in the police court for keeping more goats than two, as allowed by a municipal by-law.

The case hinges upon the definition of the word "cattle," for municipalities may legislate only in the matter of nuisances arising from the keeping of cattle and pigs.

R. A. Bonnar, K. C., counsel for the defence, announced that he would take the case to the appeal court. His lengthy quotations from medical magazines, his ouching photos of dying babies revived by goat's milk, and his picture of a goat's scrupulous habits of cleanliness were all unavailing.

ONTARIO FARMERS USE THEIR LOAN PRIVILEGES

Borrow Nearly $600,000 in Four Months —3,000 Apply for Money.

During the first four months of operation of the Agricultural Development Board of the Province of Ontario, the province has lent to farmers in long term loans $571,570 and in short term loans $25,000. The extent of the demand for government loans is indicated by the fact that 3,000 applications have been received. It is stated that the scheme is achieving one of its chief objects in keeping many farmers' sons on the land. The father secures a loan from the government to buy an adjacent farm for his sons, mortgaging both farms in order to get the loan.

The system also enables city men who have had perhaps some farm experience in youth to take up farming. Farmers who have lost their buildings through fire are also aided. Seventy-five per cent. of the applications are for loans for building purposes. In some cases loans are obtained to pay off existing encumbrances, as loan companies demand 7½ per cent. to renew, whereas the Agricultural Board lends the money to the farms at 6 per cent.

OUR FEATHERED ALLIES.

(Ottawa Journal)

Man is fortunate, in his ceaseless battle against insect pests, to have allies. These allies are the birds, some of which remain by his side the year round, but most of which come northward with the first breath of spring. It has been, estimated by careful observers that birds in the State of Nebraska, for example, destroy 170 carloads of insects daily. The destruction which our same feathered allies accomplish in Massachusetts is put down at 21,000 bushels. Whether or not these calculations are accurate, they at least show how futile would be the struggle of human beings against their relentless enemies without such reinforcements.

The annual toll of insects in the United States is put down by scientists at a billion dollars. The loss is chiefly in growing crops. From the time the seed is planted in the ground until the harvest has been garnered, the warfare against malignant insects is incessant. Insecticides alone could not stave off disaster. A bird is ten times more effective than the best artificial destroyer. This being so, we should be kind to these beautiful and melodious migrants. If blackbirds destroy beneficient birds, we should not hesitate to destroy the blackbirds. The least friends can do it to stand together.

FIFTEEN MINUTES OF RADIO EACH DAY

By Edward N. Davis

Formerly Technical Electrical Expert For U. S. Government

Lesson No. 52.

THE WAVE METER.

One of the most important instruments used by radio engineers, inspectors and experimenters is the wave meter. The name itself indicates that the wave meter is an instrument employed to measure the length of the other wave emitted by a radio transmitter or the length of the either wave to which a receiving set is tuned.

In a given oscillating circuit, that is, a circuit containing inductance and capacity in which oscillations occur as a result of the discharge of the condenser through the inductance coil, the size of the condenser and the size of the inductence coils determine the frequency with which the condenser discharges through the circuit. If we know the frequency of the current flowing in a circuit we may determine the wavelength of the circuit from the simple relation, wavelength equals the rate at which the waves travel, divided by the frequency.

Therefore a circuit of known capacity and known inductance has a know frequency, hence a known wavelength. A wave meter cinsists of a circuit containing a condenser and an inductance coil, the combination of these two elements resaulting in a circuit of known frequency or known wavelength. If either the condenser or inductance coil is made variable the wavelength of the wave meter is changed, the greater the value of reductance or capacity the longer the wavelength and the smaller the values of inductance or capacity, the shorter the wavelength.

In most wave meters the inductance coil is of fixed value and the condenser is of the variable type.

The wavelengths for the different settings of the condenser may be marked directly on the condenser scale or the scale may be marked only in degrees and the wavelength obtained from a chart. This chart shows the values of wavelengths corresponding to the condenser settings in the form of a graph.

Figure 1 shows a wave meter consisting of a fixed inductance coil, a variable condenser and a thermo-ammeter. This type of wave meter is useful in tuning transmitting stations, the thermo-ammeter being used to show when the wave meter is adjusted to the same wavelength as the circuit under measurement.

In determining the wavelength of a transmitting station the transmitter is placed in operation and the wave meter shown in Figure 1 brought within a few feet of the ground lead. The condenser is varied until maximum deflection is noted on the themo-ammeter which means that the wave meter is adjusted to resonance, i. e., the same wavelength as the transmitter. The desired wavelength is then read from the condenser scale or from the chart provided for that purpose. This method may be employed in tuning either spark transmitters or continuous wave transmitters, and is preferable to the audibility method sometimes used.

In determining the wavelength to which a receiving system is adjusted the wave meter shown in Figure 2 is brought close to the ground lead at a point remote from the receiving set itself. With the receiver adjusted to the incoming signal the buzzer of the wave meter is set into operation and the condenser of the wave meter varied until the maximum sound from the buzzer is heard in the telephones, which indicates that resonance has been obtained. The desired wavelength is then read from the chart provided with the wave meter for that purpose.

RADIO SIGNALS RECEIVED ON A MOTOR TRUCK.

The special radio concert broadcasted from Schenectady for the entertainment of the passengers on the Lackawanna train was also heard by the driver of a motor truck.

U. S. REPORTS RE FISHING VESSELS ARE NOT CORRECT

Ottawa, July 14—(Canadian Press)—Reports published in the U. S. that Canada has adopted new regulations regarding the terms on which U. S. fishing vessels are allowed to use Canadian Pacific ports are quite unfounded.

This was said definitely this morning at the department of marine and fisheries here. The order in council to which reference was made in U. S. despatches was passed on May 9 last, and has been in force ever since. This order in council is limited in its application to U. S. fishing vessels visiting ports in British Columbia during the calendar year 1922, and its effect is to allow U. S. fishing vessels to secure bait and supplies and to ship crews in Canadian ports, providing they land their catch at a Canadian port.

The order in council does not apply to the Atlantic coast. On that coast there is in operation a system of licensing U. S. vessels to enter Canadian ports. Vessels so licensed may buy bait and supplies, ship crews, or tranship fish in bond to the U. S. Until recently the license fee for these privileges had been $1.50 a ton on each vessel, but at present the licenses are issued on the payment of a nominal fee of $1 a vessel.

Misfortune Dogged Steamship New York All Way on Trip to Naples.

Milan, July 14.—Dogged by misfortune all the way, the passenger ship New York has just arrived at Naples, having taken a month to cover the passage from New York.

When she was five days out, three boiler tubes burst, and the ship lay in mid-ocean for days while repairs were being made. Another five days were lost at the Azores owing to an engine breakdown. Near Algiers five cases of smallpox were reported among the passengers, causing consternation on board.

On arrival at Palermo the port authorities discovered that she did not carry an Italian doctor, as required by law, and the company was fined 85,000 lire. Finally Naples was reached, when it was found that robbers had got on board and stolen articles from the passengers. To all this was added another fine of 85,000 lire by the port authorities because the ship had landed at Palermo passengers' luggage destined for Naples and Genoa.
