

Go forth, my verses, and win friends for me;
Their faces I perchance may never see,
But should my book prove worthy of its claim
There will be some to brighten at my name,
And, turning o'er the leaves, reflect and say,
"These rhymes a pleasure to the mind convey."