OUR MORNING STROLL.

NO. XI.

Thursday morning opened under a heavy cloud of mist, and gave evidence of not being a day propitious for a joyful celebration. The rain storm which had lasted for two days had left the streets wet and muddy, while the sky, dull and leaden, threatened another deluge. Soldiers in gold lace uniforms, calculated to make a dude sick with envy, fitted to and fro from an early hour; silver-haired veterans of the wars, and hosts of others of every creed and nationality under the sun, all seemed bent on doing their share to make the ceremonies of the day as imposing as possible. We, too, with the rest, were anxious to see all the sights, and consequently at a very early hour were on the streets ready to take in all that our pair of eyes could bring within the optical vision. As early as 10 a. m. the different companies and organizations who intended taking part in the big procession were astir and hastily making for their respective headquarters. The head of the big procession was placed on 5th Avenue and the estimate given by the leading newspaper was that over 30,000 persons marched in it, and that upwards of 100,000 strangers were in the city to witness the celebration. All the ships of war, including the French squadron, were ranged off the Battery, and when we reached the foot of Madison Square the sight was grand beyond description. As far as the eye could reach every available inch of ground was occupied. A couple of stands were erected near the entrance of the square. These were occupied by the President of the U. S. and members of his Cabinet, Bartholdi, DeLeseps, and a host of other distinguished persons. The procession of the military and the various organizations was so extensive that when they had got about half past the reviewing stand, the President and the invited guests hastily entered their carriages and were driven to the wharf, where they were on once conveyed on board the steamer and left for the head of the line of ships taking part in the naval procession. Every available water craft in New York and Brooklyn was pressed into service. Admission on board was by ticket, and long before the hour for starting all the tickets were sold, and not one-tenth of the people who wanted to go out to see the unveiling could be carried. It was nearly 1 p. m. before the signal was given for the ships to get under way, and as the long line started it was a sight that will be seen only once in a life time, and those who were fortunate enough to behold it will not be likely to soon forget it. It was a great day for Liberty, France, Bartholdi and the United States, and the round million of people who witnessed the ceremony, or took part in the celebration, will hold it in life-long recollection. Probably no such sight was ever witnessed in the world before, and it will doubtless be ages before the like will occur again.

RAISING THE LAST PIECE INTO PLACE.

Over at Bedloe's Island the finishing touches to the statue had been given the night before, and all was in readiness for the final inauguration. As the hour approached for the closing scene the mist became denser, and just as the ships started towards the island the rain commenced to fall. Standing on the wharf nearest the island the statue could be but dimly seen through the fog and mist. As the line of ships approached the island a circle was formed and a space left for the passage of the steamer conveying the President and invited guests. On landing the party took up a position at the foot of the pedestal and the Count D'Leseps, on behalf of the people and nation of France, presented the statue to the people and Government of the United States. Senator Evarts delivered an oration in reply, of which the following is the closing paragraph:—"Today, in the name of the citizens of the United States who have completed the pedestal, and of the voluntary committees who have executed the will of their fellow citizens, I declare in your presence, and in the presence of these distinguished guests from France and of the august assemblage of the honorable and honored men of our land and of this countless multitude, that this pedestal and the united work of the two Republics is completed, and surrendered to the care and keeping of the Government and the people of the United States."

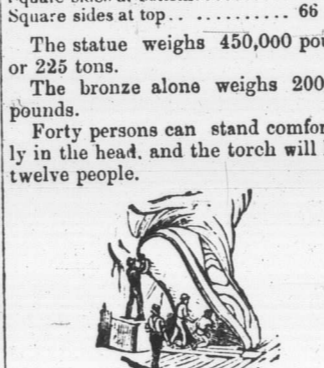

At the conclusion of Mr. Evarts' speech, at a given signal, the President pulled a cord which removed the tri-color of France from the face of the statue. This was the signal for a grand naval and military salute from the guns of the fleets, the forts in the harbor and the regiments stationed on the wharves of the city. Added to this was the screeching of the engines on water and shore, all creating a din, never before heard or even thought possible.

The following are the dimensions of the statue:—

THE END OF THE TRAGEDY.

A MAGISTRATE'S COURT IMPOSES A FINE UPON THE CARROLL BROTHERS.

The two Carroll brothers who were a short time ago acquitted on the charge of murdering Albertus L. Carr, and Stevens, at Delta, on the 27th ult., were up before Justice Bell, Elliott and DeLeseps, at Delta, on the 27th ult., charged with malicious injury to the property of Althure Day, whose house was wrecked and property thrown out on the road on the night of the shooting. Much interest in the trial was manifested, and the court room was crowded with spectators.

A large number of witnesses were examined, whose evidence was much the same as that given at the inquest. After consultation, the magistrates decided to adjourn the case for a week, in order to obtain legal advice on some points of law which were not quite clear to them.

On Wednesday last the court resumed, when the Carrolls, barrister, of Brockville. No new evidence being offered, Mr. Judd, on behalf of the Carrolls, admitted the charge, and the defendants were ordered to pay damages to the amount of $10 each and the costs of court.

Justice Bell, in giving judgment, said that the previous good character of the Carroll brothers had a great deal to do with the lightness of the penalty. He hoped that the tragic ending of their midnight frolic would be a warning to the defendants for the rest of their lives.

Justice Elliott said that he was the magistrate who took the information of the principal witness, before the inquest. His opinion then was, and he had not changed it since, that the shooting was purely accidental, and that the Carrolls had no intention of committing any other act than that of putting Mrs. Day's goods into the road. This in itself was unlawful, and he trusted that the Carrolls would profit by the lesson they had received.

Mr. Judd said that the defendants were perfectly satisfied with the judgment, and felt keenly the tragical ending of the affair. They had got a lesson they would never forget, and hoped, by good conduct in the future, to in a measure atone for their participation in what was to all concerned a sad and serious circumstance.

Our hitherto quiet neighborhood has been stirred of late by the rumour that a dire disease afflicted some of the pupils of the public school. The affair is thus described by an aspiring young poet:—

Come, listen to my jingle,
Good people one and all,
Ye married folks and single,
Yes, children large and small.
Our women got excited
It reached a dreadful pitch;
Their children were accused
Of suffering from—
The School Board being called on
To straighten up the matter,
Said the rumor was unfounded,
As also did the doctor.
And now the fuss is over
And the children back to school;
Let everyone be guided
By the blessed golden rule.

"Snow! snow! beautiful snow!" sings the poet. Well, we have snow, but it's wet, not beautiful.
We expect Mr. Joe Steacy, of Elbe, here shortly, to take the place of Mr. John Steacy, who intends, we hear, succeeding Mr. W. J. Cavanaugh in the store line.

Last Friday night the members of the L. O. Lodge held an oyster supper in their hall here. There was a large crowd. After doing ample justice to the oysters, the company was entertained by speeches delivered by Rev. Messrs. Coates and Sanderson and others. About the music we are not prepared to say anything.
The Holland teacher, who has been ill for a short time, has returned.
The mines here are turning out some fine specimens of ore.
We learn from our friend, the teacher, that the school has an average attendance of about 40.

SCOTT AC NOTES.

What is being Done in Counties where the Act is in Force.

Violators of the Scott Act in Halton county have been experiencing a great deal of trouble of late.

The Kingston News says that the refusal of constables to act, on account of intimidation, has practically demoralized the Scott Act in Renfrew county.

Since the 1st of May, Inspector Phillips, Brockville and S. Leeds, has had 55 cases for infraction of the Scott Act; as 80 convictions were secured, the revenue from fines is $1,550.

Mr. J. Deacon, police magistrate of Brockville, paid into the hands of the county treasurer last week the sum of $845, the amount of fines paid for the violation of the Scott Act, since May 1st.

The attempt of the friends of the Scott Act to break the dominion of whiskey in Moncton, N. B., is causing intense excitement. Twenty convictions hang over the heads of the liquor dealers. On appeal, these were confirmed by the Supreme Court, but the liquor men openly defy the law, and threaten to carry the cases to the Privy Council in England.

At Perth last week John Wilson and Isaac Grant, the leading hotel-keepers of the town, were arraigned before Police Magistrate Allan, charged with violating the Scott Act. Several of the principal business men of the town were subpoenaed as witnesses, and considerable interest centered in the cases. When they were called, however, both pleaded guilty and were each fined $50 and costs. Several other prosecutions are in progress.

The following extract from the presentation of the grand jury of the county of Lanark speaks for itself. "In your lordship's address to the grand jury, reference was made to beneficial effects that resulted from the enforcement of the Scott Act by abolishing to a large extent the treating system, thus removing temptation out of the way. The grand jury entirely agree with your lordship's remarks, but at the same time we are aware that it is a very difficult matter to enforce the Act in the present state of the law, it being particularly hard to get evidence to convict those who are guilty of violating the law, and we strongly recommend that such amendments or additions to it should be made as necessary for the more strict enforcement of the Act. Notwithstanding as to how we may differ as to the advisability of the Act, now that it is a law of the land, we wish to see it thoroughly enforced."

At this season of the year it is very necessary to keep a bottle of West's Cough Syrup in the house for sudden colds. Nothing like it. Cures like magic.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Reporter:—Our Union meets every week for consultation and although we cannot say that the Scott Act is as we want it, yet we are pleased to know it is doing its work of extermination. True, since the Scott Act came in force many of the low, base and degraded are induced to sell intoxicating liquors, but many of them are readily brought to justice, and after paying the penalty of the law they gladly refrain. One, Mr. W. C. Hayes, a farmer, has just been brought to justice and compelled to pay a fine of $50 and costs. Titled a warning, and we think, will to a great degree, prevent others from taking such steps as he has been taking.

Also a Mr. Holmes, a young man from Brockville, came to our village with a jug, but as seen eyes were upon his track he was quickly "juggled" to the extent of $50 and costs; but he being unable to pay the fine was committed to jail. Being in the hands of the anti party, however, he was allowed to escape, our temperance constable being absent. We are very sorry to hear of other young men trying the same game. Our village landlords have in a quiet way been disposing of the poisonous draught, but one of them having met Mr. Deacon to his home a wiser, and as we supposed, a poorer man, but having enough supporters in Farmersville and vicinity, they paid his fine, leaving a balance of enough to more than pay another fine should he break the law again. Can we expect the Scott Act to prosper under these circumstances. The law is all right were it properly enforced. What we want is a prohibitory law, and we trust that is what we will have after the next election. Let Prohibition be the platform; and every woman in the land "do her duty," and it will be the platform. Now is the time. It must soon be done, or otherwise postponed for another four years. Let every Union and Scott Act supporter be at work with renewed energy. Buckle on the armour of Prohibition; send men to represent us who will stand by the right and who will boldly represent the right in every place, whether it be at his home, in society, on the platform, or in Parliament. Let it be nothing short of Prohibition, and the violation of that law a criminal offence.
