Ease, Comfort and Health

It was once remarked by Professor Huxley, after falling into an indiscre-tion which annoyed him, that when a man says what he has no need to say he is sure to blunder. The truth of the observation will hardly be questioned unless by the very few, if there are any such who never say more than any such, who never say more than ere is necessity for saying. Most of us acknowledge, if we review experience in the matter, that we have frequently erred by saying what needed not to be said. But why is it that people so persistently commit this mis-take? In the ordinary small talk of old, or of society, it matters little whether it is committed or not. But when serious matters are in ques-tion, whether in conversation, in set speech, or in correspondence, a case is frequently spoiled by irrelevance or redundance. To say what you mean to say is comparatively easy; to leave off when you have said it is difficult, and for many people impossible. In Hux-ley's case the fault, which he probably did not often commit, was due neither to want of clear thinking, nor to want of facility in the use of words. One or the other or both of these causes will explain the inability to "keep to the point" which is usually apparent in the speech and writing of uneducated persons. But often, also, the speaker or writer forgets that extraneous considerations, interesting enough to himself, are of no interest to those whom he

An American author who has recently returned from London, where he came much in contact with Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, tells this anecdote illustrating one of the most charming personal traits of the famous novelist.

Mr. Hawkins has private apartments in Buckingham street, next door to the house in which William Black lived for many years. This place is about a mile from the parish house occupied by the author's father, who is a rector of the Established Church. The constant coming and going of parishioners at the old home made it impossible for the novelist to enjoy the privacy and immunity from interruption neces to the prosecution of his literary labors, and compelled him to find a working-place away from his parents'

He had just entered into the full enjoyment of this arrangement when he discovered that his absence from the family roof was a source of keen anxety to his mother, who could not bring herself to relinquish her motherly sollcitude for the comfort of her son. She was in constant fear that he was not properly cared for, and spent many wakeful hours at night worrying over Immediately on learning of her anxlety the son asked permission to spend his nights in his old room under family roof, using his apartments in Buckingham street simply as a place in which to do his work. Every night, and often at great inconvenience, he returns to the parish house, solely to insure the peace of mind of his mother, who is now well advanced in years.

Affection of a Beaver.

A beaver dying of a broken heart! sure, yet one famous beaver, owned by W. J. Broderip, the naturalist, actually pined away in homesickness for his ab-Binney, as this tendersent keeper. hearted little fellow was called, was a great pet in the household, Mr. Broderip tells us in his "Leaves from the Note Book of a Naturalist," and he had not been long in his London home when he set about building a dam for himself in the city house as cheerfully as if he had been in his native haunts. Plenty of dainty titbits from the kitchen found their way to Binney through the hands of the housekeeper, who took great interest in him, and speedily won his affection. He showed his devotion to her in many pretty and amusing ways. At last, on the removal of his master from town he was taken to the Tower of London, and put in commodious quarters, under the care of a kind attendant. Everything was done to make Binney happy, but he lost all appetite and took no interest in his surroundings. Sweetmeats were brought, but he would not touch them, and only grew daily thinner and weaker. At last the attendant, in despair, took Binney back to the housekeeper with whom he had lived since the earliest days of his captivity. At sight of her the little creature gave a cry of delight, and dragged himself to her side. But it was too late to restore his former health and spirits. He died within a few days, much to the grief of all his friends.

No Occasion For Mirth.

General A. S. Burt, who recently returned from Manila, in an interview said: "My observations and opinions of conditions in the Philippines differ somewhat from those held by a great many people. General Otis labored a long time and with splendid success, and after much fighting came home and announced that the war was practically over, and his tour of duty was pronounced very successful. General MacArthur took up the job and found that for one year there was as much fighting to be done as there was before General Otis left. When he left he pronounced the war to be practically over, and his tour was declared to be very successful. These generals are entitled to their country's gratitude fo their successful work; but, as far as the war being over is concerned, that is another question. As a matter of fact, the Island of Sumar, one of the largest in the archipelago, is still un-subdued, and General Hughes is still fighting there. Many observing offi-cers have committed themselves to the pinion, and I am one of them, that the troubles in the Philippines will not cease during our time."

86-Year-Old Debt Paid,

In 1816, the year after the battle of Waterloo, an aristocratic customer of the famous firm of wine merchants, Hedges & Butler, ran up an account of £20, This year, the firm was surprised to receive from the Court of Chancery a cheque for £95 12s. 8d., in settlement of the account, with the accumulated interest. cumulated interest.

The customer became bankrupt in 1816. Subsequently, he set aside for the benefit of his creditors £2,000 in the then newly-issued Consols, the value of which, with the accumulated interest, is now greatly enhanced.

The comparatively speedy settlement by the Court of Chancery the account of Messrs. Hedges & Butler was assisted by the fact that the firm's trade ledgers go back in complete form to the year rendering proof of any debt easy.— Lloyd's Weekly.

Paines' Celery Compound Positively and Permanently Cures.

It Puts the System in Perfect Condition to Cope With all Hot Weather Dangers.

During the hot month of June peoie should closely attend to their condition of health. Small streams make mighty, rushing rivers; the little ills of life when neglected, frequently bring on maladies that end in death. The so-called trifles of to-dayweak and deathly feelings, nervous twitchings, debility, sleeplessness, and heavy, duil pain in the head-may in a few days result in dread disease, paralysis, awful paresis or insanity. This is the time when Paine's Celery Compound should be used by old and young who feel that they are not up to the standard of full health, strength and activity. The hot enervating weather of summer will soon overtake the weak, languid, nervous and brokendown. The results will be appalling and fatal to thousands, if the system be not fortified by that best of medicines—Paine's Celery Compound. No other medicine in the world like it for making pure, rich blood, and for bestowing that robust health that can successfully cope with the dangers that have to be excoun-tered in midsummer. Many Want to Rule Lendon Pelice. Among the candidates for the ofpolice in London are one majorgeneral of the army, seven colonels or lieutenant-colonels, three majors and five captains, says The Newcastle (England) Chronicie. The latter all occupy somewhat analogous posts in the proyinces, but the other officers are military men pure and simple. There is also one baronet and one knight among the applicants which goes to show that, although the emoluments of the office are much greater, the post is not so attractive to those bearing titles as that of city marshal, for which cently a couple of peers of the realm sought appointment. The police committee will select five from the numerous applicants, and from these the court of common council is to choose Sir Henry Smith's successor.

Mexican Girls.

UCH has been written of the beauty of the senoritas of Mexico. Many a tourist goes there with exalted ideas of the charms of the high-caste young women with recen heigh-caste young women. with raven hair, soft olive complexions and bewitching eyes. Evidently the charms of that matchlessly balmy cli-mate and the wonderful picturesque-ness of scenes everywhere have blurred the gritten vision of many of the writthe critical vision of many of the rs, and as a result they dwell upon the beauty of the senoritas. However, according to one Mexican correspondent, the beauties are by no means plentiful. "A large part of the Mexican young women have prominent, heavy noses. This characteristic is more noticeable among the people in the rural pueblos in the valleys. From fourteen to twenty, most senoritas are in their prime so far as facial beauty is concerned. From twenty to thirty the dark pigment in their complexion develops rapidly, and nine out of ten of them ruin the softness of their complexions by inordinate use of the cos-metics and face washes which comprise a surprisingly large proportion of the national imports from Europe and the United States. There is no denying that the eyes of the average Mexican girl, except in the lowest classes, have a peculiar mildness. The long, heavy eyelashes over the dark eyes give an expression of seriousness and pathos that one never forgets. The hair of the senorita is seldom fine and flossy. All the women in the peon class dock their coarse hair squarely across the forehead, while the young women of the upper class deck their foreheads with an infinite lot of frizzes and intricate mazes of finely spun curls. A curious fact is that some of the old families in Mexico have followed a fashion in hair arrangement, characteristic of the particular family, for several generations. For instance, there is the rich and powerful Yorba family of Chihuahua. Every woman in the family for more than one hundred years has frizzed, curled and plastered her hair after the style Grandma Yorba (a famous belle in her day and an acquaintance of old Queen Mercedes) adopted in the last days of Spanish dominion over Mexico. The exquisite black-lace mantilla shading the eyes, the high comb, and the coral and pearl jewelry become a senorita more than they would any other woman in the world. Perhaps it is the oddness of these graceful charms that has won the general praise of so many visitors to Old Mexico. The senorita at the opera, with her coquettish fan, her berosed hat, and her gorgeously colored silken gowns, looks very attractive, but at close range only a few of the women have the freshness, the vigor and the clear-cut, refined expressions of American young women of like sta-

A Fox's Revenge.

A gentleman out shooting one day came to a river, where he saw six geese beyond shot. He determined to wait for them to approach the shore. While sitting there he saw a fox come down to the shore and stand some time and observe the geese. At length he turned and went into the woods and came out with a very large bunch of moss in his mouth. He then entered the water very silently, sank himself, and then, keeping the moss above the water, himself concealed, he floated among the geese. Suddenly one of them was drawn under the water, and the fox soon appeared on the with the goose on his back. He ascended the bank, and found a hole made by the tearing up of a tree. This hole he cleared, placed in it the goose, and covered it with great care, strewing leaves over it. The fox then left; and while he was away the hunter unburied the goose, closed the hole and resolved to wait the issue. In about an hour the fox returned with another fox in company. They went directly to the fice of chief commissioner of the city place where the goose had been buried, police in London are one major- and threw out the earth. The goose could not be found. They stood regarding each other for some time, when suddenly the second fox attacked the other most furiously, as if offended by the trick of his friend. During the battle the hunter shot them both.
