WHAT MIGNON SEES IN CAMPBELLTON

(Special Correspondence of the World)

CAMPBELLTON, Oct. 23.—If the name of this place were spelled differently one might conclude that nature had suggested it because there are humps enough on its back to remind one of many beasts of burden.

The town straggles along the south shore of the Restigouche River about two miles, but climbs the hill's at the rear but a short distance. The streets are crooked and hilly and after a rain the mud lies three or four inches deep with but very few crossings; the sidewalks—where they are any—are the worst of any town's in the province, the planks being worn into holes of all sizes, and people with small feet have to be particularly careful of their pedal extremities.

A mud sidewalk is now being built as an experiment. The principal business street runs parallel with the river and is called Water St.

The buildings for the most part are old and shabby, but the new post-office now nearing completion will be an ornament to the street; it is built of brick with stone trimmings and is on the south side of the street.

The building now in use is on the north side, and, as no crossing approaches it, is a problem to get there without wading on a wet day.

There are six or seven hotels scattered the length of Water street,—all shabby on the outside and far from first-class in any respect, we are told.

Churches of all denominations are represented, and all are at the east end of the town. The homes, for the greater part, are tasteful and some of them handsome; almost all are surrounded with a patch of weeds or badly kept grass plots. A great lack of taste is displayed in this respect, the excuse being that the season is too short for flower culture.

Some of the prettiest homes are situated on the hillside back of the town, and the view obtained from the windows is grand, but the climb to the houses is anything but agreeable or restful. The buildings are placed without much regard to regularity and give a visitor the impression that they were built before the streets were made and in consequence stand in odd corners and just where a piece of ground happened to fit the dwelling. In this respect Campbellton differs from any town I have previously visited.

There is no opera house or public hall of any kind, which is a great drawback, as the people are an amusement-loving class and would patronize amusements generously if they had the opportunity.

The I. C. R. tracks run through the length and centre of the town, and trains dash through at all hours of the day and night; engines with clanging bells clatter and clash up and down with long trains trailing behind, or shunt back and forth, jarring the stillness of the night and smothering the sounds of the day. The streets cross the tracks at right angles and are entirely unprotected. In many cases approaching trains are not visible to the pedestrian or driver till a few feet from the crossings, so that people, and especially children, who have to cross the tracks are in constant danger, and it is a wonder that more accidents do not occur, as the express trains dash through the crossings at great speed. The station is a long low wooden building situated at the west end and has an immense yard with a large number of tracks.

The principal industry is lumbering, and many mills are situated all along the shore. Shives' mill at Athol, about three miles west of Campbellton, has a very pretty situation on a level point of ground that runs along the shore of the river. The mill looks to be first class in every particular and is surrounded by huge piles of lumber ready for shipment. A track from the I. C. R. runs down to the mill, and the cars are loaded and shipped to market by rail.

Croup

A reliable medicine and one that should always be kept in the home for immediate use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will prevent the attack if given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even the croup cough appears. For sale by all druggists.

The houses of the workmen stand in monotonous sameness along along one side of the road that leads to the mill, and rather detract from, than add to, the beauty of the picture as viewed from the highroad above.

The river is not deep enough for vessels to go above Campbellton, but lumber is shipped by vessels from the mills here.

The I. C. R. gives employment to a great many people here. The river is about a mile wide opposite the town, and a ferry boat plies back and fourth at irregular intervals during the day to Cross Point, where a small village is situated.

A mile or two west of Cross Point is the Indian Mission, and quite an interesting place it is. A lumber mill gives employment to the Indians who live there and who demand their pay at the end of each day's work. A fine stone church with gilded spire is the pride of the mission, and here the Mission Fathers, in their unique costumes, lay down the law. The homes of the Indian families are neat frame houses and seem clean and well kept.

Campbellton supports two newspapers—the Events and Tribune—and the merchants display a good deal of enterprise in their generous support of their local papers.

The social life of every country town has its own peculiarities and that of Campbellton is no exception. The ladies are the most indefatigable callers I have ever met.

When a stranger visits the town the entire feminine population turns out to call on her, and each one pours out the story of her domestic worries with her servants if she has any, or the difficulties she has encountered in the search for one. After these calls are returned the formalities repeat themselves, and that seems the limit of hospitality except on rare occasions. Many pretty, well dressed girls are met in the streets here, and all the people give one the impression of comfortable living and contentment. Taken all around Campbellton—with its grand wooded hills behind and the range of Quebec mountains across the river, with Sugar Loaf lifting its lofty peak heavenward, with the beautiful winding Restigouche at its feet, and its 4000 happy busy inhabitants—is a place well worth visiting.
