As a prince and ruler he was of few words, stern, quick to read men's motives, and of unflinching determination; as a man he was beloved by his associates and his residence was the scene of many a joyful gathering.

How the affairs of Germany will be conducted after his death is hard to determine. The emperor is hasty and full of martial ardor and would welcome a war. The officers of the army and navy would be glad to get an opportunity to secure promotion by acts of valor and the common soldiers would also favor it. Bismarck's death may hasten the war which must eventually come.
