LONDON, To-day.

The Times military expert in an optimistic review of the present military situation points out his reasons for believing the war is not yet near its end, and discusses the arming of all the Allied armies for the campaigns of 1917 and 1918. Our superiority in the field, says the writer, is not yet adequate; hence it does not give us that annihilating preponderance which is necessary for victory. Next spring, having completed our tria will be left alone against the ombined attack of Russia and Italy. In his view, Germany must inevitably choose to sacrifice her gains in the West rather than see her ally driven back on the Russian and Italian fronts.-London Times.

ewfoundlanders in the Advance--Dominions Losses.

Further details are now available the Fighting in France in which he Newfoundland contingent took part. It fell to the lot of the Newindland men to take the brunt of the attacking, and after an intense mbardment they leaped from their renches, and made off across the dreary space between our position

Theirs was a hard fight in more han one sense, for they never reached the German trenches. Long before they had reached the enemy poition, the hidden machine-guns and the spreading shrapnel had taken such deadly toll that the battalion was a broken wreck. They struggled on, facing as great odds as any force and it was not their fault that they did not win through. They died with a cheerfulness that has been the chief attribute, next to their courage, of the little force from the smallest of our Oversea Dominions.

What Anzac will mean to the Australian and New Zealand troops, Helles to the immortal 29th Division. and Ypres to the Canadians, Beaumont will mean to the Newfoundlanders. They are not a numerous body, but they have proved that they "can pull their weight and more," as their general told them after the battle. A large number of men have come from Newfoundland, most of whom have never been away from their island before. Large numbers also are being trained for the Navy, and of these the same things may be said. The fishing banks have produced some of the finest seamen that have ever donned the blue jacket. Out all the year in the driving fogs to reap the rich sea harvest from beneath the long neavy swell of the North Atlantic ollers, they must of necessity, learn great deal that even our own men lives have never learned. For 25 years Newfoundland has been training men for the British Navy, and her senior service, and that it will seems certain. A good guarantee of the enthusiasm of the men of the Dominion for the sea service is to be had in the fact that immediately after the news of the Jutland battle the recruiting for the Navy was greatly increased .-London Times.
