CHAPTER XIX.

Lady Camilla reddened so furiously that the baronet perceived it, and determined at some more favorable opportunity to demand from madam an explanation of her speech. The character of his devotion to the lovely widow must have strangely changed when his doubts were so ready to awaken.

Much against his will, Sir Charles was now hushed to the rear, where he jogged on hour after hour, catching no glimpses of the occupants of the carriage, save when Trilix once seized a moment, when the attention of her companions was otherwise engaged, to peep at him. However, he solaced himself with innumerable cigars and attempts to define his plan of proceedings when he returned to England. He was in honor bound to make Lady Camilla his wife; but ere he could do this, he must obtain the consent of his Goldwyn for their ill-assorted union to be dissolved. He did not imagine that there would be much difficulty in doing this. She had so carefully avoided him that he felt convinced she would be as eager to be free as he was to make her so. He started at last from a reverie to find himself within a few feet of the carriage, which had stopped at the door of an inn, so dirty and uninviting in appearance, that the baroness, although not oppressed with much nicety of appetite, acknowledged that she could not eat her luncheon within its walls.

They were now travelling through mountain scenery, that grew wilder and more romantic at every moment; and when Trilix proposed that they should endeavor to obtain some bread at the village bakery, and then, driving on, unpack the basket of delicacies with which the countess had insisted on providing them, beside the first stream they saw, not a dissenting voice was raised.

"The young ladies whom I take under my protection," the baroness observed, as she gave the driver a sign to proceed, "ought to remember that it is not their province to suggest plans for my guidance. I wish you were not so impetuous, child. However, as your motive was a good one."

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Really and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap, but it is so good for prompt results. It is a sure cure for a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 1/2 ounce of Elix. from any druggist, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 14 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It is truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat, and loosening and raising the phlegm, soothing and breaking the inflammation, and gradually but surely the annoying throat trouble and associated cough disappear. Nothing better for whooping cough, croup, pertussis, or bronchitis.

There is a small and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "Elix. from Norway Pine" with full directions and don't accept anything but guaranteed. The above instructions or money promptly refunded. The Pine Co. Toronto, Can.

ation that induced both of them to look around.

Unperceived, unheard by either of the ladies, seven or eight roughly-dressed men, each carrying a stiletto, and a pair of pistols stuck in his belt, had approached them, and their leader, hat in hand, was bowing to the startled baroness.

The leader of the band, with all the grace of a courier, asked if he had the honor of addressing her Excellency the Principessa Caspares. Ah! yes; he knew that he could not be mistaken. He had been looking for her so long—one, two, three days; and he held up his fingers. He was delighted to see the most illustrious lady at last.

"Tell me your errand without any more fine words," she answered, impatiently. "You are a brigand. You intend to rob me."

He did not deny the safe impeachment, although his reply was intended to be reassuring.

"La signora shall have no cause to complain of the usage she receives at my hands. If she will accept my arm, and request her fair companions to follow quietly, it will do away with the unpleasant necessity of uttering threats, or using these;" and he pointed to a bundle of cords carried by one of his followers.

"Surely, fellow, you will not attempt to detain us!" exclaimed the baroness, more alarmed for the young creatures, who, pale with dread, had crept to her side, and were grasping her dress. "You can have my watch, my rings, the contents of my purse, but I insist that you permit me to return to my carriage."

"The signora's coachman, warned by me that he would not be safe if he remained within a league of this place, has taken flight," the brigand chief replied; "and, as there is not a decent hotel within two hours' journey, her serene excellency will understand that she has no resource but to accept the hospitality of her most humble servant. Your luggage is in the hands of my men, so you need have no uneasiness about that."

"Spare me your civilities, pray," replied the angry baroness, "and tell me precisely what it is you require. What sum, I mean, do you demand for my liberty and my friends?"

The chief shrugged his shoulders. "La signora is too hasty. I cannot decide how many purses of gold she is worth to me and my good comrades till we have taken counsel together. She has nothing to fear. We are honorable men, and pledge ourselves to respect her; but, in return, she must obey."

So significant was his tone, so threatening the frown on his brow, that even madam succumbed. For a few seconds she had meditated screaming for assassins; but a little violently with her assailants; but a little reflection showed her the madness of such a proceeding. It would certainly bring back Sir Charles Ormsby from his vain search for the missing carriage; but what could he do against such a numerous band but increase them by a furious resistance, that would probably end in his being murdered before her eyes?

As soon as this thought took possession of her mind, she was eager to be taken ere he could return. The capture had evidently been long planned; and this conviction brought consolation with it. The brigands knew her name and rank, and doubtless that of Lady Camilla. Most likely they had obtained their information from some gossiping servant at the countess's who might have added exaggerated accounts of the wealth of the ladies that had inflamed the cupidity of these men.

Everyone was hungry, and so every one unbent, especially as the viands were delicious, and the fresh air in which they were discussed odorous with the wild flowers of the mountain range over which the zephyrs swept. Madam Caspares, lulled by the sound of the little cascade, leaned back against the tree, and fell into a doze; and Lady Camilla forgot to be cold and satirical when Sir Charles courtously drew their young companions into the light, cheerful chat he instituted.

Presently the baroness awoke, and looked at her watch. The sun was beginning to decline, and there were some leagues to be traversed before they could arrive at the destined halting place. At the sound of her voice the quartet started asunder, and every one arose, but it was with reluctance. Lady Camilla had asked Sir Charles a question respecting a tour he once made in the Hebrides, and this had led him to give such an amusing sketch of persons and places he had seen in the northern isles, that even Bessie was sorry when he was interrupted.

While the baroness went in search of the carriage, which was no longer in the spot where they had left it, Lady Camilla stepped daintily down to the stream to dip her white fingers in its cool waters, and Bessie took out her sketchbook to dash off a rough outline of a scene she was never likely to behold again.

Trilix, who was an enthusiastic admirer of her friend's talents, was kneeling beside her, assisting to steady the book, and smilingly watching the rapid strokes, that would be obliterated by and by into such a spirited representation of the scene, when madam uttered a slight exclamation.

"Loosen up that cold WITH MUSTEROLE."

Have a jar of Musterole handy. The moment a cold starts use it freely. Just apply this clean white ointment with your fingers over the congested parts. You will immediately feel a warm tingle as it penetrates the pores, followed by a soothing cooling sensation and quick relief.

Made of pure oil of mustard and other simple ingredients, of well-known medicinal value, it will not blister, sting, or burn, and is recommended Musterole not only for colds, throat, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, cramp, neuralgia, and congestion. Taken in time it will prevent pneumonia. There is nothing just like Musterole or nearly as good for any of the above ailments. If your druggist hasn't got it insist that he get it.

Better than a mustard plaster.

THE INEVITABLE

Geist has no boundaries or dividing lines. It treats the world according to God's will. And gives no thought to any man's designs. Nor heeds the dream he struggles to fulfill.

It is the common visitor to all. It comes unbidden to the great and low; We know some day upon us it will fall. But when the hour shall be we cannot know.

We need not plead: "Oh Lord, we need his smile." He may not plead: "This labor have I planned." Let me continue for a little while. God wills, and all must bow to God's command.

We dream our dreams and plan our weeks and days. We send our hopes of earthly joys afar. We think we must press on for gold or praise. Only to learn how trivial these are.

The wheels stop—there is creep up on the door— What seemed important has been thrust aside— throat aside— How strange it seems some men toil as before!

What matters trade when one you loved has died?

Faith teaches us that we must be prepared. Be ready with our courage for the tests. From the sharp hurt of sorrow none is spared. And when it comes, God knows that hour is best.

Have you a Suit or Overcoat to make? We make a specialty of making up customers' own goods at prices that are absolutely the lowest for first class work. FARRELL THE TAILOR, 310 Water St.—nov17/23

POOR JUDGMENT.

I overlooked a footstep in a s.w. 1/4 driving east by west; I stopped my car, choosing v a n, and said, "Get in and rest; you're tired, and it may be a treat to ride in this my barge; so get you in, and rest your feet, and there will be no charge." He rode with me a passing, and bored me with his talk; I listened to his grim harangue, then said, "Get out and walk. You might have ridden long and far, but when you take your seat you start to criticize my car, which simply can't be beat. You cannot understand, you say, with nerve that seems amiss, why any living human jay should buy a best like this." I left him standing in the ditch as night came on apace, and there he cursed the idle rich and exorcised his face. Next day I overlooked a skater who asked me for a ride; "This bus," he said, "is up to date," when he had climbed inside. "It is luxury to scoot in such a fine sedan; she is a peach, she is a beauty, and I'm a lucky man." Such language evermore enchants the motor driving sur; I introduced him to my amiss, and fed him full of pie. The man who plies a castile tongue will never make a hit; his withers by the fates are wrung, his shoes are full of grit.

Internal cleanliness protects against disease

It is but a step from those immediate results of constipation—headache, heaviness, loss of appetite—to serious disease. Such minor ailments are a warning that poisons from food waste are flooding your body. Keep clean internally.

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illnesses including the gravest diseases of life.
