ANNABEL

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER VI.

EVIL TIDINGS FOR MRS. LANGTON—THE

TATAL DISCOVERY.

"A surprising thing is it not?" said
Mr. Langton, attributing his wife's violent excitement to nothing more than the extraordinary gharacter of the news he had given her. "I vas quite struck also when I learned it, but I am gladalso, for I never approved of Soymour's conduct to his sister, and this chance meeting with her orphan daughter gives him the opportunity of atoming for it in some measure. Ho seems quite pleased with the girl."

"Oh!"'said Mrs Langton, with a bitter sneer, "doubtless "the girl" would take very good care that he should. And the circumstances favored her design mest admirably. She it was, no doubt, who prevented him from communicating with us, knowing that this would deprive her of the opportunity of wheedling herself into his favor."

"My dear, you are entirely wrong," interrupted her husband, with a hearty laugh. "The girl didn't know who the old gentleman was who had come into her hands. And she doesn't know even yet, for no sooner did he come to understand who she was—which he speediy did, for she bears her mother's name of Annabel, and few questions put to the landlady confirmed the truth—than he carefully concealed his own name, and never uttered a word by which he could be identified. Now he has gone, and left them as much in ignorance on this point as ever."

"Why, what could be his meaning for that "said Angusta dubjously."

be identified. Now he has gone, and left them as much in ignorance on this point as ever."

"Why, what could be his meaning for that?" said Augusta, dubiously.

"No doubt that he might have experience of the girl's true character. And the result seems to have pleased him intensely, for he writes of her in terms of the highest admiration. I am almost unclined to think that remorse and shame helped to make him conceal himself. But I have no doubt he means to withdraw the veil ere long, and even to have her to Rockstone. More than that, the young man who was with her in Woolman's Lane, and saved Seymour from the robber, was her lover—Philp Weston by namewho was Jansen's head clerk before his bankruptey. It happens that he is at present in want of a situation, and Seymour requested me to give him a good position in our house. I have done so and he comes on Monday as the manager of the American department."

Mrs. Langton had sat down again in her seat, under the influence of a dismay which she could scareely conceal, though she desired to do so. Her knowledge of her husband's character, as well as his present namer, warned her that he would not view the matter in the same light, or cherish the same feelings concerning it. The fidings were, however, so terrible in their maker that it was in vain for her to try wholly to hide the effect.

"Go de evens/socsph, will he make her his heir." she gasped.

"I expect so; I hope so."

"You hope so?"

"Certainly. Is she not his nicee, his nearest relation?"

"But—they—that, is, her mother—offended her family past forgiveness."

"The more's the pity, Augusta. I

"You hope so?"
"Gertainly. Is she not his nicee, his nearest relation?"
"But—they—that is, her mother—offended her family past forgiveness."
"The more's the pity, Augusta. I nover heard anything said against the man shemarried."
"But near they married? The rumor went that they were not."
"I never believed that. Neither Leighton nor your cousin Annabel were capable of immorality. They went away, doubtless, and were married in private; but that was the fault of her family, who so unreasonably opposed the union. As to no marriage ceremony having taken place, that is simply absurd—a cruel, faulcious asperation moved her of a moment's heli-f. Then, as to the re-pectability of Leighton, no one could question it."
"If was of inferior station."
"Inferior fiddlesticks," said the merchant impatiently. "He was an honorable and upright man, though I understand he became unfortunate, and was lost sight of many years ago. They are both dead now, it seems, and this girl, their child, hea been maintaing herself by teaching music. This fortunate meeting with her uncle will remove her above that necessity. Why, she will be among the wealthies heircresse in England."
"At our expense, Joseph. We havo hitherto counted on Seymour's possessions."
"So we have. And to tell you the

"So we have. And to tell you the truth, on the strength of that I have widoned the basis of our business to a degree which may have serious consequences for want of his money. But should be put in this youth, Philip Weston, as a partner, all will still be right, for of course he will marry Annabel, and they will succeed to Ecclestone and all the cash. Ha, there is the second bell, and I am Ha, there is the second bell, and I am not dressed for dinner,"

"Don't trouble yourself to-day, Mr. Laugton," said his wile, at, pale and ghastly, she rose to proceed to tife dining-room. "We are fortunately alone —fortunately, I say, seeing that we have had discomposing tidings."

She took his arm, and they proceeded to the dining-room together.

in Cassell's Household Guide. J206mdw
The blood is composed of minute particles or disc resembling the scales of a fish. Nervous force is the agent by which these discs are conveyed to the exercisal muscles. In the several members of the bedy, the muscles are mostly voluntary, those of the heart, lungs, stometh, &c., are involuntary. In order to restore a diseased or enfeebled organ, it is necessary to promote the strength of muscless through the nervous system. We have no nervous tonic at once so reliable and convenient as Fellows. Compound Sympof Hypophosphites, and we, therefore, gladly recommend it in the diseases of such organs as depend for health upon involuntary muscular action.
