RULES FOR STEERAGE

Steward an Autocrat "'Tween Decks," and Thrifty as Well.

There are probably few who realize the power of the steerage steward on an ocean liner. It is almost impossible for one who has not made an ocean trip as a third-class passenger to know the full scope of this officer's duties, and what opportunities he has of exercising almost absolute dominion over the crowds in the steerage. A college graduate who recently went to Europe in the steerage recently went to Europe in the steerage because of a slender purse, and also to study the class of people who travel "between the decks," told a reporter of his experiences with the steerage steward, as follows:

experiences with the steerage steward, as follows:

"More than an hour before the ship started from her pier in North River the steerage passengers were ordered down to their compartments. There was a grand rush for bunks. Each tried to secure one near a porthole, and as there were 24 bunks in a sleeping-room, ventilated by only one porthole, it was a lively fight. The bunks were stretched on four shelves, six bunks to a shelf, and four shelves to a room. I was behind time in fighting for a bed, and consequently found myself with a bunk on the under row, more than ten feet from the porthole. The steerage steward saw my disappointment, and said:

"You're too slows but if you want a better bunk I might get you one."

better bunk I might get you one.

"The word 'might' was hint enough, and accordingly I slipped a quarter into and accordingly I slipped a quarter into his hand. The steward then promptly evicted a huge Finlander who had preempted a porthole bunk, with the words, 'Get out; this is taken.' He then motioned me to take possession, which I did. "On the voyage my appetite frequently revolted against the diurnal supply of oatmeal and black coffee which was called breakfast. One day I poiled that on ed breakfast. One day I noticed that on coming into the mess room an hour after the 'meal' there were several of the pas-sengers eating steak and eggs. I noticed that the steward had taken from each a coin in return. After that I had steak every morning, for which I paid 25 cents or more each time. The steward said he paid half of it to the cook. ly but critical strain. Not long ago a prisoner sentenced to a life imprisonment was released from the Kingston Penitentiary owing to long years of good behavior and the intercession and petitions of influential friends. The newspapers published the fact, together with a "write-up" of the liberated man and a full history of his crime. To this Mr. Mills is strongly opposed, and he willingly gave his

"I am satisfied with the 'ticket-ofleave' system," he replied in answer to a question, "but I am not satisfied with the press. I noticed that the papers published the fact of a certain man's release. This gives him no chance at all to start life afresh. It would be perfectly justifiable to have legislation against such journalism. Let me give you an instance of the great harm it does: "After his discharge, one convict some years ago obtained employment under another name. He worked faithfully for one and a haif years. He was attentive to his duties and exemplary in his conduct. Then one day a policeman, who knew the man, went to his employer and asked him if he knew who his employe was. The name was given. The policeman laughed, and assured the employer that he had a 'jail bird' working for him. The man was at once dismissed. He was watched by the police, who haunted him wherever he went. For weeks he tried his best to obtain honest employment, but could not get it. Then he grew discouraged, and went back to the old gang. It was not long before he was in the toils again. He had no opportunity to begin life over again. Americans did right when they adopted the rule regarding the assassin of President McKinley, that he was to be given as little notoriety as pos-

Thus, as Mr. Mills pointed out, a newspaper may thoughtlessly do a great deal to prevent a liberated prisoner from making a fresh and better start in life. The publication of the news of his release is a warning to people to watch out for him and discourage him on every occasion. We think the press will be found quite willing to accept Mr. Mills' criticism good-naturedly, with this modification: that the matter to which he refers is usually printed as a piece of interesting news and without any desire to injure the discharged prisoner. Most of them, too, would, we think, cheerfully forgoe the advantage of printing a good item for the sake of helping a fellow-mortal who has fallen by the way to get on his feet again.

People are rather too much inclined to dread

the worst. There is reason to believe the King was suffering within the last few weeks from an ulcerated throat, which those closely attached to him, and especially the women of his own family, feared much to be the forerunner of cancer. According to the pro-nouncements of the doctors, their fears are unfounded. But King Edward is prohibited from smoking and is forbidden the use of any alcoholics. To look at the King, his healthy countenance would seem to give the lie to any report that he is suffering from ill-health, while The Lancet re-ports that rumors concerning the health of the King are without truth

Ventilation.

The Resilia insole expands from outsole when foot is lifted.

It thus draws in fresh air, through a tiny valve in the heel, which locks it in.

When insole is borne upon, the air contained in the cross channels is then forced up around the stocking, through a row of perforations, under the hollow of the foot.

The valve works one way only.

It thus locks the air in, when foot is lifted, compelling it to circulate uparound the stocking, and out at the boot top.
