CAMPBELL V. PRINCE.

"On Saturday the Dominion governmen was on trial; now it is the Ontario government," was the remark of a veteran Q. C. during the progress of the case of Campbell v. Prince yesterday. It will be remembered that in this case the plaintiff secured a verdict in the county court, and that it went up by the panal stages to the court of went up by the usual stages to the court of went up by the usual stages to the court of appeal, where a new trial was ordered. Age seems only to have added vigor to the suit, if we may judge by the formidable array of counsel engaged. The plaintiff had secured the services of N. G. then warden, A number of letters had appeared in the Mail reflecting on the management of the prison, and it came to her ears that Captain Prince accused her husband of being the author of them. Her husband being on duty, she went to the warden's office, and after waiting about an hour the captain came in, "looked at her in a very disdainful manner" and asked her what she wanted. She told him what she had heard about the Mail's articles and asked him on what evidence he made such a charge.

Captain Prince said there was going to be an investigation. Mrs. Campbell said she hoped there was going to be a proper investigation, and if there was it wouldn't be very much to his advantage—he was always unfortunate in his attacks. The captain then became very angry and called for the guard. The latter not coming, he went out and looked for him, and not finding him came back and took hold of her arm. It was a very vicious grasp. She said it was a public office, and she had as much right there as he had. She also said as sure as there was a heaven above them she would see his old bald head turned out of there. Subsequently the guard came in and she went out quietly. It appears that she got the information about the accusation against her husband from a gentleman in a high position who had called upon her.

Mr. Bethune: Now, who was this gentleman in high position?

Mr. Bethune: Then I will ask her to give me the name. Mrs. Campbell; I most respectfully decline.

WHICH PAPER HAS THE LARGEST

CIRCULATION? An Interesting Discussion—How Circulations are

Made—The Mail's Actual Position.

On Saturday morning the rival publishers—Mr. Graham of the Star, and Mr. Bunting of the Mail—met and fought the thing out between them, with the usual result—a drawn battle. Any disinterested person, however, who reads the entertaining reports of the occurrence in vertex day's ing report of the occurrence in yesterday's Mail cannot avoid the conclusion that Mr. Graham was really the victor. Mr. Bunting's garrulity showed that he felt the weakness of his case, and the labored and libellous of his case, and the labored and incellous article in yesterday's Mail, though pretending to expose some imaginary attempt at deception on the part of Mr. Graham, is in truth a frantic endeavor to conceal its own equivocations, and is a confirmation of Mr. Graham's victory.

Let us first examine the Mail's charges against Mr. Graham. It declares him "guilty of a fraudulent attempt to deceive the public," and bases this serious accusation upon several assertions for which it has not a tittle of evidence.

has not a tittle of evidence.

The first assertion is: "Having prepared himself for months, by means of free distribution and begging letters to postmasters, for a temperary increase in the circulation of the various issues of his papers, he (Mr. Graham) came forward with a challenge on that deceptive basis."

If the public only knew the peculiar means adopted by the Mail for years past to stimulate its circulation, they would be highly amused at the above charge which it now levels against the Star. No language could more accurately describe the modus operandi of the Mail's own enterprising publishers. In producing an abnormal stimulated circulation "by means of free distribution and begging letters to of free distribution and begging letters to postmasters," no newspaper in this broad Dominion has sinned worse than the broad Dominion has sinned worse than the Mail. The papers it has given away during its existence would make enough white paper for the whole edition of the daily Mail, widely as it is circulated, every day for six months; and we venture to assert that the number of free papers which to-day go out of the Mail printing company's building daily would, if bona fide, form a very fair circulation for a daily newspaper.

Mr. Graham's proposition for an investigation answers this beforehand, when he says: "If the books showing the circulation record have not been kept in a sysrespectfully decline.

Did you write any of the letters in the public papers yourself? I decline to answer.

Were the marks on your arm large or were the marks on your arm large or small? Witness (after a good deal of sparring)—Well, if you will just examine defendant's finger and thumb you will see the size of the marks.

bona fide prepaid and permanent circulation to such as the Mail is admitted, on all hands, to have."

This is quite gratuitous. Nowhere did Mr. Graham make any such admission. On the contrary, he has all along sought to have an investigation, based on actual, permanent paid circulation; and to the advertiser it matters not a straw whether a paper is circulated direct from the office of publication, as is the case with the Mail, or through news-agents, as is largely the case with the Star, so long as the paper he advertises in has a wide circle of readera. As a matter of fact, the very thing the Mail boasts of shows its old-fogyness; for it is well known that in most large cities, as in London and New York, the leading daily papers are circulated almost exclusively through news-agents and newsboys, and their circulations are regarded by the public as none the less genuine or permanent on that account. Moreover, an advertiser, if he is shrewd, will prefer a paper circulated in this way, just because its readers, though their number is constant, vary largely from day to day, to a paper like the Mail which day.

doubt of its being as essential a part of the Weekly Star as the Canadian edition. Both are called the Weekly Star, and why should one be excluded more than the other? The fact of the matter is, the Mail is bit ing its lips because it has been worsted by the Star, and because it has been drawn into giving the Star a great deal of free advertising at its own expense. The Mail, by insisting on absurd limitations, has practically thrown up the sponge. The origin of the whole controversy, which has resulted so disastrously for the Mail, was its own self-assumption in announcing, on posters and whole controversy, which has resulted so disastrously for the Mail, was its own self-assumption in announcing, on posters and at the head of its editorial columns, that "the Mail has the largest circulation of any paper published in the Dominion of Canada." The result proves that Mr. Graham was quite justified in disputing this position. The Mail practically confesses that it, and not the Star, has been "guilty of a fraudulent attempt to deceive the public." because it is not willing te

In common honesty, the Mail ought now to withdraw its bombastic self-laudatory posters and advertisement, and assume a nferior position.

The very lively controversy going on between the Toronto Mail and the Montreal Star with regard to circulation chiefly concerns themselves and their respective advertisers. Yet the prominent position of both these journals—which is evidenced by the fact that their discussion is as to which paper has the largest circulation in Canada—warrants the public in taking some interest in the matter.

Life is Made Up of Margins. Another assertion of the Mail's is: "He was compelled to admit that he had no hand.

Are you in the coufidence of the government? Perhaps I know something that is admitted, on all hands, to have."

Speaking to the students of Hiram College many years a zo, the late President Garfield said: I was thinking, young ladies and gentlemen, as I sat here this morning, that life is almost wholly made up of margins. The bulk itself of almost anything is not what tells. That exists anyway.

That is expected. That is not what gives the hard of the profit or makes the distinguishing dif-

f just because its readers, though their number is constant, vary largely from day to day, to a paper like the Mail which day after day goes to the very same people.

The Mail asserts also that the Star people "claim a circulation for their weekly edition which is the combined circulation of two papers," and makes a great fuss over an edition of the Weekly Star prepared special ly for American readers, of whom it has a great many. On a quibble the Mail wants to shut this edition out of the comparison, because its contents are different from those of the Canadian edition. But there is no doubt of its being as essential a part of the Weekly Star as the Canadian edition. Both fesses that it, and not the Star, has been "guilty of a fraudulent attempt to deceive the public," because it is not willing to have its broad declaration contested as it stands. This is the way in which Mr. Bunting, according to his own explanations and limitations, would have it read: "The Mail has the largest circulation (prepaid, annual, Canadian subscribers) of any paper published in the Dominion of Canada." This is eating the leek with a vengeance; it is 'Samson shorn of his locks, and shaved clean into the bargain; it is truly the shadow of its former self, with a few more annotations and modifications and explanations. The managing director of the Mail neight easily word a sentence to give the Mail the largest circulation of any paper in the world. But tion of any paper in the world. NON-FORFEITABLE LIFE INSURANCE.

THE ÆTNA LIFE INS. CO. first introduced its Non-forfeitpublic in 1866. Previously thereto the universally prevalent objection to a man's insuring his life was found to be: "Oh, yes, it is all very fine so long as one can pay his premiums, but when unable to pay more he loses all he has paid." And then would follow instances of neighbours cruelly robbed in NON-FORFEITABLE POLICIES, we answered; and so fair a system soon commended itself, and the ÆTNA'S policies became popular. Some of their features have since been imitated by other companies, but it is an undeniable fact that no policy is more highly esteemed throughout the Dominion by those fortunate enough to hold them, than those of the ÆTNA LIFE. Every ÆTNA policy now being issued in Canada contains a most liberal non-forfeiting feature, besides having its entire Reserve, or Re-Insurance Fund, annually and permanently
