it provides for the dantiest and moter and moter pensive dishes that the palate of a gourmand could desire, yet it does not omit to pro-vide equally well for the simplest and most economical household. Valuable hints are given under each head with regard to the selection of materials, such as poultry, game, vegetables, meats, fruits, etc. A chapter is devoted to wines and other bev-erages; another to milk, butter and otherse; another, a very full one, to sick room cock-ery.
