Parkinson took the body to a photographer's, and had it photographed, then to an undertaking establishment, where it was embalmed and a casket covered with pink plush and trimmed with blue silk ordered for it.

In subsequent discussion, all sorts of proposals were made. Mr. Sutherland said the opposition to the measure was designed to destroy the bill. Mr. Wood warmly resented this. He moved the committee rise and report progress, but the motion was lost. Mr. Maclean then asked leave to withdraw his amendment so that he could move it on the third reading. The committee rose and reported the ill without amendment. The third reading of the bill was then proceeded with. Mr. Maclean thought the third reading should be delayed a day.

The premier objected to this delay. The vote that the third reading take place was carried by 56 to 35. Sir C. H. Tupper objected to the speaker's ruling. Mr. Hughes moved that the bill be read a third time.

Mr. Maclean spoke at length, concluding by moving in amendment that the Grand Trunk, C. P. Senator Powell strongly supported the bill. He said the government had just been advised that the American authorities had again begun to insist upon charging a duty or assessment of per cent on all supplies going over the passes, in lieu of the escort charge, abolished some time ago. They had refused to recognize the Canadian mounted police, stationed at the summit of the passes, and insisted upon levying the 5 per cent assessment. In the past the policy of the Conserva-tive party has been to spend millions to keep trade in Canadian channels, and it was a sight for gods and men to see the members of the senate lis-tening to the speeches of an alien miner, in opposition to the government's proposal for an all-Canadian route. The deputation for the miners of the Yukon district had exceeded their instructions, and the latest advices from that country was that the delegation would receive a warm reception when it became known that they had assisted in blocking the construction of the Stikine-Teslin Rail-

To Gilmour Kloepfer went with an argument which had taken many hours in elaboration, but which took not so many minutes! in enunciation. 'Gilmour,' said Kloepfer, 'we are not lawyers; we are busiess men. We are not old politicians; we are children at this legislating. We were elected to oppose Laurier. Let us oppose him. We don't care anything about this Yukon deal, but we must vote against Laurier. He is going to vote for it; we will vote against it. If he were to vote against it, our duty would be to vote for it. That's politics, ain't it?' So straight a line of argument commended itself to Gilmour, and that is why Sir Charles on the day after the division sent for Kloepfer, and extended to him the assur-
