CITY AND COMPANY.

foronto was asking nothing more than bare justice when it asked the legislature to restore the city to the ract with the Street Railway Com-That contract in the plainest and most explicit terms conferred on the city the right and power to designate such new lines or extensions of existing tracks and services as were necessary and to require the company to provide them. In view of the clear and definite terms of the contract it is inconceivable that any count of law—eyen the judicial committee of the privy council—would have hesitated to construct them according to their evident meaning and the intention of the contracting parties. But the legislature in the private act incorporating the company managed to do more than confirm and repeat the actual bargain and gave the company a full and exclusive power, which enabled the privy council to get behind the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the privy council to get behind the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract in the private and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract in the private of the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract and transfer the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the contract of the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the right of fixing new lines and extensions from the cont the city the right and power to desighas been disastrous to the contract. Mr. Foy admitted the right of the legislature to amend the act-indeed frankly stated that it should be done. If that was the view of the government, then the amendment should have been made a government measure and not left to the private

By agreeing to the clause leaving it to the railway board to sanction new lines the railway company practically conceded the strength of the city's case for an amendment of the act and reduced to bathos its counsel's heroics about legalized robbery. THREE HOMES ABLAZE. Serious Early Morning Fire in the East End.

Awakened from sleep by the cracking of a mirror in his room at 1.50 yesterday morning, John Reid, Ashlynn-avenue, near the Kingston-road, jumped from his bed to find the house in flames. He lifted his wife and two-

A "bucket brigade" was formed, but the high wind drove the flames beyond their power. The Reid home and that Moses Myatt next door, being built wood, went like tinder. The efforts of the volunteer brigade were then turned to save the home of Christian Jacobs, who manned a pump, standing within 9 feet of the blaze, but he was house was, however, saved with a had scorching by city firemen.

Some Comments on Mechanical Piano

Mechanical piano playing is like mechanical reading, dull and uninterestlowing report from their English man- ing. Yet there are musicians who play nechanically because they have not succeeded in conquering the amazing difficulties which lurk in piano technique. They have a clear appreciation of the composer's thought, but their fingers fail to express their intention and their emotion. It may seem paradoxical, but because of their inability to conquer the mere mechanics of piano playing, their playing is mechani-cal. If they were technical virtuosi, then they would be great musicians, mode of operating it very ingenious. for they have temperament and poetic. He expressed himself as interested to pneumatic piano player is of no advantage, because it does not permit or much expression. But the Angelus is not an ordinary piano-player. Its arraigned in the county criminal marvelous patented inventions make it possible for the person playing to clearly bring out the melody of any composition and subdue the accompaniment, to accent the bass or the treble council feels satisfied that the new railroad will be extended here and on or retard the music at will. The Angelus has everything that Paderewski has in his fingers, all it lacks is a musical brain and a poetic temperament and those can be supplied by the oper ator of this amazing device, for every music roll gives a clear indication of correct interpretation. The Grand Easter Millinery Exposition

Every hat in the Millinery Salon Monday-and there will be many hundreds of them-will be shown for the first time. The exposition will be most important, for while its predecessors marked the period of information, examination and criticism, Monday's display ushers in what unquestionably will be an exceptional pre-Easter rush for hats

Each hat shown bears the character of creation resulting from the study of many master models from foremost Paris designers, and while much that is quite new will be in evidence the information were better obtained by personal inspection than attempts at description here.
