TRIBUTE FROM CORNELL

tho he was, he welcomed the progress of science and willingly accepted its general theoretical results.

"Nor had the deep and dark problems of philosophy daunted this intrepid searcher after truth. What, in view of existing knowledge, can reasonably be affirmed, he has not hesitated to affirm, nor has he scrupled to remain in doubt where the plummet of his spirit could touch no bottom. I call him, all considered, as perfect an exemplar as can be found of the knowledge, culture and thought of our time.

"Goldwin Smith was a man of great independence of spirit. And he had the courage of his convictions. Whether men heard or whether they forebore, he testified to the truth as he saw the truth. And in an age too prone to yield what Mr. Bryce calls the tyranny of majorities and the fatalism of the multitude, Goldwin Smith's courage and fearlessness and contempt of unpopularity were virtues as shining and conspicuous as they were rare and admirable.

To the Other World.

"A great scholar, a brilliant writer, a fearless teacher, Goldwin Smith was also a man of beautiful spirit and noble character. The poor will miss his charity, and the suffering his ministrations.

"As I bade him good-by a few weeks ago, when he lay very low, I said: 'I shall be glad whenever you send for me to come to you again.'

"To the other world? he queried, as his eyes brightened, and that charming smile played once more about his lips. To the other world has lost one of its noblest and bravest spirits."

believed arrangements would be made whereby anyone desiring to view the remains would be enabled to do so. The funeral itself, he thought, would be semi-private, but members of the city council and of public bodies would be welcomed.

Asked concerning the statement several years ago that the professor had dedicated his brain to Cornell University, Mr. Haultain said: "There is an enthusiastic professor of anatomy, Burt G. Wilder, there. He has written much on the subject and is particularly interested in the point of comparative craniology. He said to Dr. Smith once half seriously and half jokingly, I think you would like to have your brain so dedicated and the professor replied in the same vein. 'You may if you like.'

I think that the professor thought better of it afterwards. He left no instructions and so nothing will be done in this respect."

Wished to Die at Cornell.

On Easter Monday Dr. Smith wrote

Dr. Wilder, acknowledging a letter of condolence, saying:

"It was my hope that I should end my days at Cornell, but it is probably I have never forgotten, and perhaps I have never forgotten, and per-and allowed him his opinion without such bitter comment.

"As regards the incident of some years back, connected with Goldwin

Smith, and the degree which was subsequently conferred upon him by the University of Toronto, I was at that time on the board of governors. Well, the resolution, of course, went thru, and the degree, and all was arranged when that unfortunate series of attacks on the patriotism of the old scholar started in the newspapers.

Goldwin Smith decided not to take the degree. He wrote a simple and dignified letter in the papers, stating that for the present he would have to be content with the degree which he had already received from his alma mater.

"One day he came into my office—quite unexpectedly, for he was not a frequent visitor—and I asked him why he had resolved not to accept, the honor which Toronto was so anxious to give him. I told him that it was not fair to posterity to refuse, as later generations would wonder why we had failed to officially recognize the manifest greatness of such a man.

His Liberal Gifts.

"One day I shall surprise you by showing my sincere regard for the University of Toronto. About two years later he donated ten thousand dollars to the King Alfred Memorial library.
