WEDNESDAY, MORNING, APRIL 5.

Hamilton-Toronto Highway

Some progress at least has been made and more was in prospect on the Hamilton-Toronto highway, but at present a rather too substantial snag has been struck; and all hands must turn to and endeavor to remove it. A great deal of misunderstanding exists about the new concrete road and there is no need to add anything which might further complicate the situation. The bad features of the work and the methods of work are sufficiently well known, and an amendment has been assured for the future The real point now before the public is whether there is to be a future.

The trouble at present exists at Hamilton. Toronto has been restive under the suggestion that the city pay another large sum beyond the amount first levied against us. Some compromise on this point has been attained, and we believe the city is not unwilling to do anything in reason to carry out he project as at first designed. N nothing more, at seeing another city getting the kind of treatment Toronto is accustomed to get before the private bills committee of the legislature. Berlin came up with an innocent little bill asking in a loyal way that it be allowed to change a name which has become associated with such rascality that nearly every loyal Canadian considered the application a reasonable one. A few dissentients, however, approached the committee in the way so familiar to those who frequent the corridors in Queen's Park. The members masse and accord Berlin's request absented themselves. Mr. Crawford and a few others with whom Hon. Mr. Lucas, to the astonishment of many, acquiesced, turned down the request of the city council which had asked for the legislation, by a vote of 13 to 2. Mr. Crawford, who always loves a fight, suggested that there should be a vote of the people taken, altho aware that such a course would probably create a condition of trench warfare in the distracted city. He did, and his companions did, as they so frequently like to do, and begged the whole question.

The matter has been agitated for quite long enough and the request of the Berlin Council should have been listened to. Mr. McBride of Waterloo placed the only argument worthy of attention before the committee in favor of preserving the present name. In the course of the war, he suggested, Berlin in Germany would be captured and would become an honored name among British victories. Waterloo and Berlin would stand side by side in Waterloo County to celebrate the two great triumphs of two great centuries. The pro-Germans in Berlin, when they hear this, will gnash their teeth.

Meanwhile the situation is unsatisfactory. It is unlikely the discussion will die out. In fact the rebuff of the private bills committee, ill-considered as we believe it to be, will probably promote ill feeling to a greater degree than now appears to exist. The pro-Germans will taunt their opponents with the fact that the legislature and the minister representing the government backed them up. Berlin
