All Saint's schoolhouse on Friday evening. The room was prettily decorated with flags, bunting and plants.

Rev. A. H. Baldwin, the popular rector, presided over the service, and each of whom was accompanied by a large number of excellent musical program was presented during the evening and supper was served by the ladies of the school.

The statement that the opening of the school at the schoolhouse was delayed on account of the expected arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Gould is incorrect, for immediately after the entrance of the schoolhouse and Mr. Kirkpatrick an official set was formed.

Mrs. McGuire of St. Patrick's street gave a very large and enjoyable at home on Friday afternoon.

The at home given by the Fifty Club in the hall room of the Confederation Building on Friday evening of last week was a thoroughly enjoyable and successful affair. The pleasant surroundings of this hall room, the excellent food and the floor was in excellent condition, the side all that could be desired. And in supper, which was served by the Fifty Club, was most appetizing and dainty. Unfortunately I have been unable to give fuller report of one of the most successful parties of the season.

Cards will be out shortly for the annual at home of Alpha Lodge, which will be held in Masonic Hall, Parkdale, on Saturday evening, Feb. 14.

FROM DAY TO DAY.

A Chronicle of Unconsidered Trifles and a Criticism of the Lighter Events of the Time.

After men than myself are just now engaged in assailing and defending the management of Ontario's big educational institutions, and I do not, therefore, propose to enter into the controversy, but I must confess I have read with some amusement the remarks of a man who formerly pulled himself out of being an ultra-Canadian, who would never go abroad for a governor, an instructor, a military commander or any other official, who, in fact, went so far as to found what he called a purely Canadian flag and to flaunt it from his office window. This gentleman now writes:

"It strikes me that the best thing for Upper Canada College is to be presided over by a principal selected without regard to his country of birth."

He next proceeds to slaughter Toronto University, which he declares is a "rotten school," albeit those hands are Canadian hands. He also says: "I have become thoroughly sick of the cry that the Ontario school is 'good enough.'"

Again: "The public school trustees are either forcing their pupils beyond the legitimate limit of public schools or the whole plan is out of gear, and it is resulting in a mass of 'rotten' schools."

He also says: "I have become thoroughly sick of the cry that the Ontario school is 'good enough.'"

Again: "The public school trustees are either forcing their pupils beyond the legitimate limit of public schools or the whole plan is out of gear, and it is resulting in a mass of 'rotten' schools."

PIPE ORGAN EFFECTS.

The Triple Piano is Popular Though Five and Six Are Won.

Instead of the flat, almost plain backs which have hitherto been fashionable on skirts, the top is now cut much wider and the superfluous material is cut off, leaving a skirt of five or six inches and is cut in a manner that it stands out from the figure, says a London writer. Some of the new Paris models show five of these pleats, thus making the skirt so broad that it meets the line of the hips, and is certainly becoming to stout or over-round figures.

The triple pleat, whether of the organ type or otherwise, is the most popular, and the wadded organ pleat is shown. All skirts against the body are undated, and in this style must have plenty of slope at the front and sides, and the folds proceed to play their part in the skirt. The triple pleat is also placed on either side of the back to keep the pleats thick, and if the sides have not plenty of slope the skirt would be drawn out of place and set badly.

Respective of other lining used for the skirt, the pleated portion should be lined with stiff muslin, or supposing the skirt to be lined throughout the muslin need only run down to 18 or 20 inches, as it is by no means necessary that the rounded form is maintained to the top of the skirt. Where there are three sloped widths for the back of the skirt, and each width with its pleat, the size is too much for the pleat required, a tiny flat pleat or one or two gathers are sufficient to do the work.

Put the front and sides of your skirt into its tiny band or binding in the usual manner. From five to six inches is an excellent size for each pleat, and this is a general measure for the top of a back which is gored on either side. Tack the top firmly to the lining, and make a little cotton mark—such as an X or V—to denote the center of each pleat.

Then take a long, stout darning needle, filled with thread, and pass it through each of the back seams—that is, on each side of a pleat. Draw up this thread, and you have three loops of material thrown outward. Fasten the thread at the top, and make a great deal of half an inch for the center of each pleat.

Prepare three rolls of wadding, nearly of the thickness and about the length of the cartridge used for breech-loading guns. Insert this wadding in the top of the pleat, and turn the top of the material slightly down with it, to make the indenture seem at the top. Secure the wadding by long pins or darning needles during the process, and then turn to the inside and stitch through with thread, taking a long needle through several times quite at the back.

The wadding should be loosely rolled, and the top of the pleat should be turned down with it. When the back of the pleats have been secured, fasten the top of the material across at intervals of four inches, letting each tape be slightly longer than the top one, a depth of 12 to 16 inches is quite far enough to secure the pleats, and below this they may simply be held by the two sets of strings which keep the skirt in its place.

These long strings, which are not to be confused with the strings which hold the skirt in its place, are generally finished with a broad bow, caught up very tightly in the center, so as not to come loose on either side. Without a bow the pleats are rather discolored, and require to be spread a little.

Found Dead in Bed. When Mrs. Charles Ashby, 81 Portland street, awoke at her usual hour Saturday morning, she found her husband cold in death beneath her. He had apparently been dead for four hours.

He was 70 years of age, and retired in apparently good health. His death resulted from a heart attack. Coroner Johnson has issued a warrant for an inquest.
