The instructions given to Stefansson by the Government of Canada when he was sent north are not known. handful of men left to hold it. Four courageous young men have lost their lives in a venture that should not have been undertaken under the circumstances. Stefansson claims that Wrangler Island will be valuable as an air route station when the development of flying reaches a stage that will make it possible for passengers from northern Europe to travel to China, Japan and Asia more rapidly by going north over the Arctic waste and the pole than by taking the east or west course and sticking to the temperate zone. The thing may be possible; but it will not likely come soon, and no more Canadian lives should be put in peril for the sake of the expectation.
