The four-masted Boston schooner Horatio G. Poss, which arrived yesterday afternoon, had on board Mrs. Marie implored Burnett to take her with him. This, of course, was a board in home in this country in which birds of Theodone Burnett, the first mate of the vessel, was classed as a show the was busy helping about the cabin when the schooner made fast, Her hasband told the story of their meeting and subsequent marriage, one of the strangest romances ever chronicled. the trim figure of Marie. She threw herself into the arms of the mate, declaring she could not live without him.

Followed Vessel to Spain.

The young woman had followed the vessel to Spain, and through her knowledge of shipping she easily kept informed of the progress being made in loading and the time set for the departure of the craft. The night before sailing shired a boatman to take her to the vessel, which was anchored in the offing, and at midnight she quietly climbed over the bow and hid. She had taken food with her so she got along very well. When the schooner was some distance from port, she made her presence known.

It became a problem how to take care of the woman. In this emergiacy, Capt. W. T. Anderson, the master of the craft, hit upon a plan that simplified the whole matter. The girl was madly in love with Burnett, and he returned her after tool. Why not marry the couple! As master of the ship he had the power to do soll He broached the subject to the mate, and he in turn explained to the girl. They were every yield at the idea. So, on June 15, in the presence of some of the cray, the nuptial knot was tied by the captain.

The fact that the girl is the wife of captain.

The fact that the girl is the wife of an American citizen automatically makes her an American and no law can prevent her entry into the United States. Burnett, who is twenty-seven, and lives with his parents at 87 Kent street, South Brooklyn, has planned to send his bride to Petchogue, L. I., where his parents have a summer home, and will join her there later.

Burnett has had many thrilling experiences in his sea career, and his friends say the marriage to the French girl was a fitting climax. He was one of the crew of the British bark Carraban, on a passage from West Australia to London on October 8, when that vessel was torpedoed and sunk by a German sub-marine. With a few other members of the crew he was rescued. He was also an officer on the schooner Governor Powers, which was sunk a few years ago off the Massachusetts coast by collision with the steemer Sen Jose 8-18 with the steamer San Jose.
Burnett was a member of the 57th
