As to barking there are a great number of different sorts of barks, the meaning of each one of which is well known, says Our Animal Friend. For example, there is the barking which at night is meant to call master's attention to the fact that some burgiar or other evil-doer is hovering around the premises. When I hear my Landsee Newfoundland or my splendid St. Bernard giving warning in this way I turn on my other side and do but sleep the sounder, well knowing that no evil-doer would dare to enter my premises or even my grounds. Some years ago every hause in Twyford was entered by burgiars except my own. With jimmles they had already opened a lower window of my villa when they had to fly! The bark of warning has doubtless descended through long generations from the days when wild dogs hunted in packs and it was then as useful in recalling stragglers as the bugle of a regiment. Next-there is the bark of joy, when a dog, for instance, meets again a kind and loving master who may have been absent for a few days. No mistaking this. It is the bark of pleasure and excitement. Sometimes my beautiful St. Bernard, "Fair Helen of Troy," mingles a little friendly scolding with this, for after licking my cheeks and ears she backs astern, and, with head cocked funnily on one side barks me a lecture.

"Why didn't you take me with you?" she seemed to say. "It was cruel, and I've been wretched all the time. But I'm happy now. Don't ever leave your Helen again."

One of the places in which tourists in England revel is Bull's tavern. It looks to-day just as it did when it was erected in 1612. When repairs were necessary they were made with the idea of carfully preserving the appearance of the old place. It was here that

A curious instance of the effect of the shape of the ground upon the wind blowing over it was recently noted by Monsieur Batut as he was experimenting with kites in France. When a north wind floated the kite the latter kept its balance easily; but when the wind came from the south or southeast the kite pitched and bobbed in a very irregular manner. The explanation was furnished by the character of the surface over which the wind had passed. Coming from the borth it had a plain country to blow over; but coming from the south and southeast, it passed across broken hills, which set it into irregular puffs and undulations.

Where Hearing Ceases.

Lord Rayleigh in a recent lecture said that experiments had shown that a vibration of sound having an amplitude of less than one twelve-millionth of a centimeter could still affect the sense of hearing. Such a vibration would be so short that it would have to be enlarged one hundred times before the most powerful microscope couls render it-visible, supposing that it were susceptible of being seen at all. Old people, he said, do not hear high notes which are audible to young persons, and there is reason to believe that babies hear notes which are in-audible to their elders.
